THE ELECTION TO-DAY.

THE REPUBLICAN BALLOTS.

PRECAUTIONS TO BE USED—EFFICIENT DISTRIBUTION OF TICKETS—ENCOURAGING ACTION OF PROMINENT CITIZENS.

All the demonstrations which have been made preparatory to the exercise of the elective franchise to-day, would have been fruitless, unless sufficient Republican tickets had been issued, and every exertion made to place a complete set in the hands of every voter, and all honorable inducements used to have him vote them. Each Republican voter should not only be satisfied that he has a full set of tickets, but he should use the greatest care in comparing them with the ballots as printed below.

The four tickets indorsed: "President—Number One," "General—Number Two," "Aldermen at Large," "Constitutional Amendments," have been issued by the State Central Committee to the Central Committee of this City, for distribution in the several Assembly Districts and the Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth Wards. Tenth—Hamlin Babcock.
Eleventh—Levi P. Morton.

The ticket indorsed "Senator, Number Four," is run in only one district, (the Fifth Senatorial,) where a vacancy exists on account of the death of the late Hon. James W. Booth. The others are run in the several Congressional, Assembly, and Aldermanic Districts, respectively. There will be eight ballot-boxes in each election district of the Fifth Senatorial District, and seven in each of the other election districts of the City. In the Assembly Districts—

Every effort is being made by the Democracy to place in the hands of Republican voters tickets which are apparently Republican, but which, in reality, are partially or wholly Democratic. The only safe plan for Republican voters is to compare the tickets which are to be voted all over the county with those published in these columns, and the names of nominees on District tickets offered to them with the names of the Republican District nominees published in yesterday's edition of THE TIMES. If they do this they cannot be deceived by counterfeit indorsements, names of Democratic nominees surreptitiously interpolated, or any other device of the cunning managers of the Democratic political machinery.

That every effort has been made to distribute ballots in sufficient numbers, and where they are most needed, is abundantly shown by the energetic action of the Republican State and City Central Committees. The State Central Committee promptly delivered to the City Central Committee about ten times the number of tickets necessary to be used at the polls, and has kept a good supply in reserve, and the City Committee has furnished an abundance to all the Assembly District associations, as will be seen by the following list:

Districts.	Tickets.	Districts.	Tickets.
I	45,000	XIII	65,000
II	45,000	XIV	40,000
III	30,000	XV	65,000

X	60,000	Wards.
XI	65,000	XXIII }	52,000
XII	50,000	XXIV }
Total			1,477,000

A superabundance of tickets is necessary especially in a heated and sharply-contested contest like the present one. There are Democrats who will leave no stone unturned to defeat the Republicans in this State, and they have not hesitated in past years to obtain possession by fraud or force of the ballots of their opponents and destroy them. Some years ago the Democrats fraudulently obtained possession of all the Whig ballots in Horace Greeley's district, and the Whigs were obliged to write their local tickets on election day.

The District Associations, acting with the County and district candidates, had by noon yesterday distributed the requisite supply of ballots to the men who will attend the polling-booths to-day, and had mailed a full set, accompanied by a circular, to every voter in the several Assembly Districts. Following is the form of the circular:

SIR: Inclosed you will please find full sets of tickets for all the candidates to be voted for at the coming election that have been placed in nomination by the Republican Party in your district.

The election will take place on Tuesday, Nov. 7. The polls will open at 6 o'clock in the morning, and will close at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Never, at any previous election in this City, have so many tickets been prepared, and so many distributed, as at the present one. Never have so many citizens occupying high social, business, and professional positions, gladly volunteered to attend the polls and see that every Republican ballot was not only properly deposited in the ballot-box, but honestly counted afterward. Numbers of manufacturers, merchants, bankers, and others largely engaged in business, called at the rooms of many of the associations and obtained tickets to give to those whose votes they thought they could influence. Seldom has such a warm interest been taken in an election in this City by those who rarely heretofore ever voted, or did more than deposit their individual ballots. This action on the part of these citizens is regarded as a very encouraging sign that the possible calamity of the success of the Democracy has stirred the solid men of the community, and impelled them to use the most energetic endeavors for the success of the Republican cause.

PRECAUTIONS AGAINST FRAUD.

INSTRUCTIONS TO UNITED STATES MARSHALS AND CHIEF DEPUTIES—THEIR DUTIES CLEARLY DEFINED—LIST OF THE CHIEF DEPUTY UNITED STATES MARSHALS OF ASSEMBLY DISTRICTS AND WARDS.

The precautions against frauds on the ballot-box in this City to-day have been completely arranged, and nothing remains to secure a fair election except the faithful discharge of duty on the part of Supervisors, Marshals, and Inspectors of Election. The proper warrants have been issued to prevent fraudulent voting and repeating, and the arrangements for the detection of such conduct are very thorough. United States Marshal Fiske will remain in his office in the Post Office building during the day, and direct telegraphic communication will be had between the office and all parts of the City. About five hundred or six hundred special Deputy Marshals were sworn in yesterday, the majority of them being discharged soldiers who have served in the United States Army. A sufficient force of men will be on hand during the day to prevent fraud and rioting and to preserve order.

The following instructions have been given the Deputy Marshals:

The Deputies acting in the several Assembly districts will report to the Chief Deputies at their respective Assembly districts and be subject to their orders; and the Chief Deputies are hereby authorized to remove, at their pleasure, any of the Deputies acting within their districts.

The Chief Deputies will detail the Deputies to the several election districts, placing over them such subordinates as they may deem proper, and they will maintain to patrol the same a sufficient reserve near the centre of their districts.

Every Deputy Marshal and special Deputy will be provided with a badge and with a commission signed by the Marshal.

Such Deputy Marshals and Special Deputies have, among others, the following duties and powers:

They are to attend at the places of registration, election, and canvass, and there preserve order, and protect and support the Supervisors appointed by the Circuit Court of the United States.

They are authorized to arrest, without a warrant, in the following cases, when the act is committed in their presence or in that of the Supervisors:

1. When any person registers or attempts to register, or votes or attempts to vote, in a name that is not his own name, or registers or votes or attempts to register or vote more than once, or register or vote in an election district where he does not reside, or register or vote when he will not, on election day, be a voter in the ward in which he attempts to register or vote, or if of foreign birth, registers or votes, or attempts to register or vote, without having been duly naturalized.

It should be noted, however, that unless the Deputy or Special Deputy has a warrant, he cannot arrest, on election day, for an offense committed on registration day, even though it was then committed in his presence. If a person register illegally he may, however, be arrested on election day without a warrant if he attempts to vote.

2. It should be a flagrant case in which an election officer should be arrested without a warrant, while in the actual performance of his duties. Such an arrest should only be made as a last resort, where obvious fraud is persisted in and repeated after remonstrance. As, however, a fraud in counting the ballots, if not stopped while in process of execution, may accomplish its object beyond practical remedy, an arrest of an election officer without a warrant should be made without hesitation if he is found, during the counting of the votes, to be engaged in any illegal act which could have an effect upon the canvass. Mere trivial and formal irregularities not affecting the canvass may be left for punishment after an arrest by warrant.

3. If any person induces or compels any officer of election to receive an illegal vote, or to refuse to receive a legal vote, or to register any applicant illegally, or to refuse to register a person entitled to be registered.

4. If any person induces an officer of election to give a false certificate or statement in writing in respect to the election.

5. If any Inspector of Election shall refuse to put a challenge lawfully made, or to mark any name for challenge when requested so to do by any citizen.

6. If any person, Inspector or otherwise, places illegally a name on the registry, or a ballot in any box.

7. If any Inspector of Election refuses to receive the legal vote of a citizen, on the ground that some one has before voted in that citizen's name. The right of the citizen to vote is not taken away if some one has wrongfully voted on his name; but he should give convincing evidence of his identity.

8. If any person allows ballots to be put or remain in the box before voting commences, or puts any ballots unlawfully in the box, this is the offense commonly called "stuffing the ballot-box."

9. If any person, by force, or threats, or bribery, hinders or delays, or attempts to hinder or delay, a citizen from registering or voting.

10. If any one hinders or prevents free ingress to, and egress from, the room in which the registration, election, or canvass is going on, unless the room is already full of those authorized to be there, to wit: Inspectors, Poll Clerks, Supervisors, Marshals, Police in uniform, and, during registration or voting, electors who are in line, and duly authorized watchers and challengers.

11. If any canvassing officer makes, or attempts to make, any false certificate or return in regard to the number of ballots.

12. In connection with the canvass, the offense specially to be guarded against is the intentional miscounting of votes. When this is clearly attempted, the Deputy Marshal, or Special Deputy, should be prompt and energetic in the discharge of his duty.

13. If a person purposely interferes with a Deputy Marshal or Special Deputy when the latter is executing any writ, or is attempting to arrest any person for an offense committed in his presence or in that of any Supervisor, or if any person attempts to rescue any person arrested by any Deputy Marshal or Special Deputy.

14. If any Inspector of Election, or other officer or person, unlawfully removes or attempts to remove, or to cause to be removed, from the room where the registration, election, or canvass is going on, any Supervisor appointed by the Circuit Court, or any Deputy Marshal or Special Deputy, or if any such person prevents or attempts to prevent any such Supervisor from taking and retaining such position with reference to the books of registry, ballot-boxes, and ballots, as will in his judgment best enable him to scrutinize the manner in which the registration, voting, or canvassing is conducted.

15. If any person, officer or otherwise, shall prevent, or attempt to prevent, any Supervisor from inspecting and scrutinizing any register, or from affixing his name to any register, or keeping a copy thereof, or from affixing his signature to any certificate or return of election, or making a statement thereon in writing in regard to its truth or fairness.

16. If any person shall hinder or molest, or aid or abet in hindering or molesting, any Supervisor, Deputy Marshal, or Special Deputy, in the discharge of his duties.

17. If any person prevents, or attempts to prevent, any Supervisor, who desires so to do, from personally scrutinizing, counting, and canvassing every ballot in every box.

18. If any election officer makes any distinction founded upon the color of the applicant or voter.

It is not to be understood that the above embraces all the offenses for which Deputy Marshals and Special Deputies may arrest the offenders without warrant.

The Marshal and his General Deputies and such Special Deputies as he may authorize under his hand and seal, may, when resisted in making an arrest, or in the performance of his or their duties, call on all bystanders to assist, and they must so do or are themselves liable to arrest.

All persons arrested, whether with or without a warrant, must be at once taken before a United States Judicial Officer, with the witness to the offense. Persons arrested under a warrant must be taken before the officer who issued the warrant.

Every Deputy Marshal and Special Deputy, after accepting his office, is liable to arrest for any neglect or violation of his official duty.

These powers of the Deputy Marshals and Special Deputies are to be prudently but energetically exercised. It should be remembered that the object of the law is: First, to secure to every person entitled by law to vote the free exercise of his vote; second, to prevent voting by any person not so entitled; third, to secure a fair count and return of the votes actually cast.

So long as these objects are not interfered with, or wilfully so attempted to be, no arrest without a judicial warrant should be made for any trivial infraction of the law, nor should any arrest be made unless the evidence of crime is reasonably conclusive. Care should be taken not to substitute mere opinion for facts or evidence of facts.

Deputy Marshals and Special Deputies will, in all cases, obey the orders of the Chief Deputy of the district.

Unless otherwise notified, Deputy Marshals and Special Deputies will be expected to be present at the places of registration and election in the district to which they are assigned, Oct. 27 and 28, and on election day from 6 A. M. to the final completion of the canvass. Absence of half an hour at noon and at night will be allowed for meals. No Marshal will be paid for any day or any portion of which he is absent without authority.

I respectfully invite all persons to make known, in writing, immediately to this office, any instances of official impropriety on the part of Deputy Marshals which may come to their personal knowledge.

And, in order that those intending crime may be forewarned, and offenders secured, I request all citizens, of all parties, to assist the United States officers in enforcing the proper observance of the acts of Congress, relating to elections; and I call upon all citizens, and upon all civil and Municipal authorities, to co-operate with the officers of the United States in securing an honest vote, an honest count, and a satisfactory election, regardless of party results.

OLIVER FISKE, United States Marshal.

To these Chief Deputies the following letter has been sent by the United States Marshal:

GENTLEMEN: The Special Deputy Marshals in your respective districts are hereby directed to report to you and obey your orders, and you will be held responsible for the proper performance of the duties belonging to them. You are hereby instructed and empowered to enforce the laws of the United States concerning elections in your district, and for that purpose you have a right to call to your assistance the posse comitatus of your district, which consists of all persons above the age of fifteen years, including the military of all denominations, militia, soldiers, marines, and police; all of whom are bound to obey and assist you in the lawful discharge of your duty.

Arrangements have been made with the Western Union Telegraph Company to forward all messages from you to this office without delay, and the charges therefor to be settled for by this office. You will inform yourself of the location of all the branch offices of said company in and adjacent to your district, and will advise this office by telegraph of any disturbance or breach of the peace occurring in your district, and if necessary call upon this office for assistance to quell the same. You will also, so far as is practicable, hold your reserve at your head-quarters in readiness to go to the assistance of the Chief Deputy of any other district, upon orders from this office. You will also, at least three times during the day of election, either personally or by your aids visit every polling-place in your district, and inform this office by telegraph whether or not the election is going on in an orderly manner.

You will entertain and investigate well-founded complaints made to you by citizens of the infringement of their elective franchise, and duly protect them in their rights. All persons arrested in your district by Deputies, unless you are otherwise directed by me, should be brought immediately to this office. That there may be no delay in the payment of the Deputies and Supervisors, you will, on the day following the day of election, furnish me a complete list of the names of the persons who duly served as such, showing the days on which they served and the election district for which they were commissioned.

It is not necessary, and you are not expected to make any return of the time of service of the Deputies who have been appointed to serve without compensation.

THE FEDERAL ELECTION LAW.

OFFICIAL STATEMENT OF THE CONFERENCE BETWEEN THE MUNICIPAL AND UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES.

The following statement, in connection with the conference with the Police Commissioners on Sunday, regarding the enforcement of the Election law, was prepared by Corporation Counsel Whitney yesterday:

The conference was requested by Mayor Wickham for the express purpose of securing co-operation, and avoiding a conflict of authority and instructions between the Police Department and the United States Marshals. Several important conclusions were arrived at by this conference, rendering impossible any real disagreement between the two authorities. It was conceded upon all sides that the general obligation to preserve order and keep the peace was upon the Police Department and not upon the United States Marshals. Acting within the line of official authority, the United States Marshals are entitled to the assistance of the Police Department in the same way that they are entitled to the assistance of all good citizens.

There was no difference of opinion in the conference, except as to one proposition of law, which difference was relieved by the practical suggestions of Mr. Davenport as to the instructions which he would give the Marshals as to the manner of performing their duty. In the first place, he would allow entire publicity in regard to the cases in which warrants had been issued for fraudulent registration, so that if mistakes had been made they could be discovered, and persons entitled really to vote would be in a position to prove it, and persons not entitled to vote nobody desired to protect.

In the second place, with regard to all cases for which warrants were not issued, if upon being challenged they take the oath and the vote is received by the Inspectors, they are to vote subject to arrest and punishment if they have voted illegally.

In the third place, United States Commissioners are to be placed at three or four points in the City, selected on account of accessibility to the various polling places, before whom all persons arrested are to be at once taken, and their right to vote passed upon. It was assumed, from the experience in the past of those arrested, that a number at least would be discovered to have been wrongfully suspected and some mistake to have occurred which could be explained at the time. And finally, with regard to all who are held, it was agreed that all who desired could still go before four gentlemen, two from each side—Mr. Marbury and Mr. Olney representing the Democrats, and Gen. Barlow and Alderman Billings representing the Republicans—and if they said that, in their opinion, the man should be permitted to vote, he should still be permitted to.

This arrangement seemed to furnish the necessary security against any abuse of the power to arrest upon the day of election. It was not assumed by any one that any abuse of power had been contemplated, but it was deemed desirable that there should be harmonious action between the authorities upon election day, and each be satisfied with the entire good faith of the other.

The above named gentlemen will sit all day at the hotel corner of Union Square and Fifteenth street, for the above purpose.

A TIMES' reporter had an interview last evening with Commissioner Davenport in relation to his statement respecting the action of the conference. In reply to his questions, Mr. Davenport said that he had consented to have all questions of fact as to the alleged rights of doubtful voters to have their ballots received, submitted to the parties named by the Corporation Counsel, who are to decide on the facts, but who are not to pass upon the questions of law involved. Whatever decisions might be rendered by these gentlemen, any person found violating the Election law in any way would be held in custody. Mr. Davenport further stated that this arrangement was made in order that no person who was entitled to vote should be denied the right to do so.

WHERE THE UNITED STATES COMMISSIONERS CAN BE FOUND.

As is usual upon election day, United States Commissioners will hold court in different parts of the City for the immediate disposition of all cases that may be brought before them. Commissioner Davenport will be present at his rooms in the Post Office Building during the day; Commissioner Deuel at University place and Eighth street, at the rooms of the Lincoln Club; Commissioner Shields at Republican Hall, Thirty-third street and Broadway; and Commissioner Little at One Hundred and Sixteenth street and Broadway. All of the Assistants in the United States District Attorney's office will be on duty during the day to attend to such cases as may require their notice.

THE RECENT RIOT IN RAHWAY.

The statement published yesterday by a morning paper, to the effect that the Boys in Blue composing the Newark, Elizabeth, Plainfield, and Westfield Hayes and Wheeler Clubs, which paraded at Rahway, N. J., on Saturday last, had robbed stores, attempted to fire a Democratic banner, assaulted a boy, broken windows, threatened to burn down a house, and finally created a political mob and stabbed harmless citizens, is emphatically denied by Mr. E. H. Ropes, the Grand Marshal of the Elizabeth delegation of Boys in Blue. This gentleman, who is acquainted with the facts in the case, states that the disturbance originated in the following manner: A member of the Fifth Ward Club left the column of his company to see some friends, and returning, was questioned by some roughs as to which division he belonged to. He had no sooner replied, than he was instantly thrown to the ground by a sudden blow on the neck. He arose, and while attempting to escape was struck with a stone, and sank senseless to the ground. While he was being removed to a drug store, an assault with stones was made upon the rear division of the Elizabeth delegation. During this attack one member had his cheek badly cut by a stone, and many others were more or less severely injured. As the Police made no attempt to restrain the violence, it became necessary for the members of the club to take the matter into their own hands and disperse the mob. Some of the rioters, while being pursued, ran into an alleyway, accompanied by a boy. This boy, who it was asserted was struck by one of the Boys in Blue, was not touched, but conducted unharmed to the street. In the meantime more of the rowdies ran into this alleyway and created such disorder that a riot became imminent. Although there were Police in the alleyway, they made no attempt to suppress the disorder. The commander of the Boys in Blue seeing this, promptly appealed to the citizens near the spot, and with their assistance order was soon restored. The colored club was a special object of assault from a gang of rowdies, who were promptly scattered by the colored men. No attempt whatever was made to fire a Democratic banner, or to molest quiet and unoffending citizens. No windows were maliciously smashed by the Boys in Blue, those that were broken—and many of them had been illuminated in honor of the procession—being accidentally shattered by the shock of the artillery salutes. No stores were robbed, nor any attempts at robbery made; no threats were made to fire any houses, and no citizen or Police officer was stabbed. On the contrary, the whole disturbance was caused by an unprovoked and dastardly assault by riotous roughs.

DISFRANCHISING REPUBLICANS.

COMMISSIONER BRENNAN'S HIGH-HANDED PROCEEDING—ALLOWING DEMOCRATIC KEEPERS ON BLACKWELL'S ISLAND TO VOTE, BUT KEEPING REPUBLICANS ON DUTY.

The Tammany politicians of this City, balked in their schemes for repeating and for the colonization of bogus voters to-day, seem to be straining every nerve to preserve their power, and have resorted to some rather disreputable tricks. Among the latter is a proceeding put on foot by Thomas S. Brennan, the Tammany Commissioner of Charities and Correction, which deserves more than a passing notice, its practical object and result being to disfranchise the Republican keepers at the Penitentiary on Blackwell's Island. In past years the custom has been to allow one-half of the whole number of keepers to go to their homes in this City on the evening preceding the election. This was to enable them to vote. At noon on election day they were required to report for duty on the Island, so that those who had remained could be relieved from duty and also be given the opportunity to vote. The operation of this fair and equitable plan has been frustrated at this election. Commissioner Brennan sent a telegram to Warden Fox, of the Penitentiary, yesterday afternoon, in which the names were given of the men who were to be relieved from duty to-day. This list includes the names only of Democrats residing in Brennan's District in this City, and in the district of his father-in-law Callaghan. All the Republicans are obliged to be on duty at 6:30 A. M., thus depriving them of the right of voting. Among those who are not let off are some who are entitled to be relieved from duty over twenty-five Republicans are thus disfranchised, beside a few Democrats who do not reside in the districts graced by the presence of Messrs. Brennan and Callaghan.

INTIMIDATION OF COLORED VOTERS.

AN ATTEMPT MADE IN THE FIFTH ASSEMBLY DISTRICT TO INTIMIDATE COLORED MEN.

An attempt is being made in the Fifth Assembly District to intimidate the colored voters in that district. Yesterday, upon application of one Martin Kehoe, of No. 26 Sixth avenue, Justice Bixby, at the Washington Place Police Court, granted warrants for the arrest of twenty-five colored men who were designated as repeaters, and the warrants were placed in the hands of the court officers for service, but up to the hour for closing the court none had been arrested. The Express endeavored to make capital out of the affair last evening, by swelling the number of warrants issued to one hundred, and laid great stress upon the importance of the arrests, alleging that "great excitement" prevailed around the court during the day. The truth is, there was no more than the usual amount of interest manifested in the court at any time during the day, and the probability of the arrests being made on the warrants issued was doubted even by Justice Bixby himself. The names of the persons for whom warrants were issued are as follows: Theodore Botts, Lucius Butcher, William Fox, Joseph Rodriguez, James Smith, Julius Chacon, William F. Hanna, J. M. Solon, Robert C. Benjamin, Martin Johnson, William Johnson, Hillard Burch, Joseph Martinez, N. G. McDonough, George Milner, William Reed, Archibald C. Weeks, Nathaniel P. Brown, James McDonald, William Gaffney, Charles A. Miner, Henry Cooper, Charles Patterson, Henry Rugby, Charles Miller.

PRELIMINARY VOTING.

In a canvass of Trinity Building yesterday, Hayes got 175 votes, and Tilden 91.

A vote taken in the Mechanics' and Traders' Exchange, stood 37 for Hayes and 20 for Tilden.

A vote in the Metropolitan National Bank yesterday, stood 34 for Hayes, and 15 for Tilden.

The 11 A. M. train yesterday, from Philadelphia, gave 104 votes for Hayes, and 32 for Tilden.

On the 6:30 P. M. train from Philadelphia on Saturday, there were 192 votes for Hayes, and 102 for Tilden.

In the drug store of J. F. Henry, Curran & Co., there are 31 votes for Hayes, 9 for Tilden, and 1 for Cooper.

A canvass of the 8:30 A. M. train from Philadelphia yesterday, gave 42 votes for Tilden, 93 for Hayes, and 2 for Cooper.

A vote was taken yesterday on the Northern Jersey express by two Democrats, with the following result: Hayes, 223; Tilden, 85, and Cooper, 5.

After the adjournment of the Mining Board yesterday, an informal vote was taken on the Presidential question, resulting as follows: Hayes, 17; Tilden, 3.

The following telegraphic dispatches were received yesterday by Mr. L. F. Booth, General Eastern Agent of the Chicago and North-western Railway Company, in this City:

DIXON, Ill., Nov. 6.

We took a vote on the western bound California express train on the Chicago and North-western Railway to-day with the following result: Whole number of votes 254, of which Hayes and Wheeler received 197, Tilden 31, Cooper 16, and Green Clay Smith 10. Most of these voters live at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha and Lincoln, Neb., and will got home to vote.

—BRUCE WILCOX, Conductor.

CLINTON, Iowa, Nov. 6.

L. F. Booth, General Eastern Agent:

On our eastward-bound California express train to-day we took a vote of the adult Pacific passengers, with the following result: Total number of votes, 220, of which Hayes and Wheeler received 180, Tilden 27, and Cooper 13. The majority of the voters stated that they had paired off before leaving home, so as not to wholly lose their votes.

G. HEWITT, Conductor.

AN OFFICIOUS DEMOCRAT REBUKED.

It is alleged that Mr. H. C. Moore, road master of the Long Island Railroad, one day last week, in a public bar-room, made the declaration that if any man under him in the employ of the company voted for Hayes and Wheeler, or failed to vote for Tilden and Hendricks, such man would be discharged. This coming to the knowledge of one of the officers of the company, he wrote a sharp letter of rebuke and warning yesterday to Mr. Moore. It is the desire of the Board of Management that all the men in the employ of the company shall be left entirely free in the exercise of the right to vote, and for whatever candidates they may choose, and any attempt at interference or intimidation will be met in a summary manner.

THE SUIT OF THE HIGH BRIDGE SUICIDE.

The suit of William Hildebrand against William B. Ogden for the recovery of $80,000 for alleged criminal conversation with and seduction of plaintiff's wife by the defendant, was up before Judge Gilbert, in the Supreme Court of Kings County, yesterday, on a motion of defendant's counsel to vacate an ex parte order of the court allowing Hildebrand to sue in forma pauperis, he being a man without means. During the proceedings the Court interrupted the plaintiff's counsel, the Count Johannes, with a reference to the reported suicide of his client, and remarked that if he was dead he probably did not longer care to sue in forma pauperis. "No," said George, the Count Johannes, in his most dignified manner and pointing dramatically at the ceiling, "the venue is changed to a place where no fees are charged." The Court took the papers and reserved his decision.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT IN WESTFIELD, N. J.

Mr. Charles W. F. Wittkee, Assistant Postmaster in Westfield, had his left arm so injured by the unexpected discharge of a cannon last Friday that amputation was rendered necessary. The operation was skillfully performed by Dr. F. A. Kinch, assisted by Dr. Charles A. Kinch. The accident occurred during a Republican demonstration. Mr. Wittkee was born in Poland, and is twenty-four years of age. Though only twelve years in this country, he has acquired such use of the language as to speak and write English as if native born. He has worked his way up without means, except his own energy, industry, and economy, so as to fill acceptably the position of Deputy Postmaster to the satisfaction of all. He is now doing well, and will cast his vote for Hayes and Wheeler to-day.

The order recently issued by the Police Commissioners to arrest as vagrants all habitual station-house lodgers, has had the effect of diminishing the lodgers sixty per cent.

Since the reduction in the price of admission to the American Institute to twenty-five cents great crowds attend the exhibition nightly. The managers have decided to keep the Institute open till Saturday, Nov. 18.

The polls open at 6 o'clock in the morning, and close at 4 in the afternoon. See that your vote is deposited before 10 o'clock, and spend the remainder of the time, if possible, in securing the votes of your neighbors.

The body of a man found in the East River, at the foot of Seventeenth street, was yesterday identified at the Morgue as that of John Meagher, aged twenty-nine, of No. 53 Third avenue, who mysteriously disappeared on Oct. 23.

The body of an unrecognized man, about thirty-five years of age, light complexion and hair, and clothed in dark pantaloons and brogans, was found in the North River yesterday near Pier No. 4, whence it was removed to the Morgue.

A meeting of the Board of Trustees of the New-York College will be held Wednesday afternoon, at 4 o'clock, at the corner of Grand and Elm streets, for the purpose of hearing the report of the Executive Committee on the appeal of Charles Roberts, Jr., and James Knox, who were discharged as tutors of the college in June last.

BROOKLYN.

Watch the polls, and guard against fraudulent voting.

Compare your electoral ticket before voting with the one printed at the head of THE TIMES editorial columns.

Let every Republican in New-York make it his duty to vote and vote early, and the State is safe for Hayes and Morgan.

The laying of the foundation of the new municipal building was begun yesterday, and it is the intention of the contractors to push the work as rapidly as possible.

Adam Swartz, aged forty-two years, residing in Forsyth street, while working in Durkee's stores, in Furman street, yesterday, fell from the third story of the building, breaking his right leg and left arm, and fracturing his skull. He was taken to the Long Island College Hospital by Ambulance Surgeon Otterson. It is feared that his injuries are fatal.

Stephen C. Jackson, who claims ownership to the famous Jackson's Hollow property, by inheritance from his father, yesterday made application to Judge Gilbert, in the Supreme Court, Kings County, for the punishment of Bernard Sheridan, for contempt of Court, on the ground that his action in the purchase of the property for taxes, and the notification of the squatters that he is their landlord, had substantially displaced the Receiver appointed by the Court. The motion was that Sheridan be punished by fine and imprisonment. The Court took the papers and reserved its decision.

WESTCHESTER COUNTY.

Be on your guard against "decoy" ballots. See that your tickets contain the names of Republican candidates and no others.

NEW-JERSEY.

Before voting compare your ballots with the list printed in THE TIMES of this morning.

James McKenna, Assessor of the town of West Hoboken, died yesterday from an attack of inflammation of the lungs.

George Quillhardt, a boy four years of age, fell into a cistern on Summit avenue, Jersey City Heights, yesterday, and was drowned.

Let every Republican be at the polls early, otherwise he may discover that some hard-working Democrat has voted already in his name.

Senator Frelinghuysen and Prof. Atherton, the Republican nominees for Congress, addressed a large Republican meeting in New-Brunswick last evening.

The body of William Reilly, who fell overboard at the fort of Nineteenth street, Jersey City, several days ago and was drowned, was recovered yesterday.

Abraham Lutkins, a boy eighteen years of age, while running with an engine to a fire in Paterson Sunday night, tripped, and falling beneath the wheels, was fatally injured.

Jacob Mason, one of the victims of the stabbing affray in Hart's saloon, Newark, Friday night, was rapidly sinking last evening, and it was thought he could not survive till morning.

James Helein, one of the employes of Gievenaud's silk factory in Union Hill, was arrested yesterday for having stolen $200 worth of material from the factory. He confessed his guilt and was committed for trial.

Yesterday afternoon George Wilks, a boy eight years of age, was knocked down by a runaway horse on Newark avenue, Jersey City Heights. The horse trod on his head, inflicting injuries from which the boy died within an hour.

Henry Hunter, while at school in Tuckahoe, several months ago, was accidentally shot by a comrade. The ball lodged in his brain, but to the surprise of every one, he recovered. Last week he was attacked by what seemed to be epilepsy. Friday he became unconscious, and yesterday he died.

Constable Tallman, of Guttenburg, endeavored Sunday to arrest three men in Union Hill who he suspected were burglars. They resisted him desperately and one of them stabbed him on the cheek. They were captured and gave their names respectively as Thomas Clark, William Hart, and Charles McDaley.

Information was received in Newark yesterday that John H. Payne, of No. 18 Burnett street, had committed suicide in Middletown, Conn. He went to that town to take a situation with the Middletown Rubber Company, and is supposed to have been intoxicated when he committed the rash act which ended his life.

THE VOTE AT COLUMBIA COLLEGE LAW-SCHOOL.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

There has been some discussion regarding the action of the Columbia College law-students in taking part in the procession of Friday night last. Some of the students have used the press as a medium for expressing their dissatisfaction at the course pursued. The transparency bore the likenesses of Hayes and Wheeler, and the inscription, "Columbia College Law-School." As it was a Republican procession, it was naturally inferred that these represented the Republican element. The students who favor the Democratic principles had the option of parading Thursday evening, were they so inclined. We read of Princeton College in demonstrations of the kind, and Cornell students parading in costume; and we have every reason to believe that our rendition of the part we assumed in the demonstration we believed in was as much in keeping with the maintenance of the dignity of the institution we represented as our reception along the route by the public was cordial. In lieu of the "Amateurs" in the press of yesterday making such wild assertions as "that four-sevenths of the students were Democratic," a vote was taken in the morning division of the Senior Class, which resulted as follows: Hayes, 100; Tilden, 30. In the afternoon division of the Senior Class the same thing was attempted. At first an informal vote was taken. Those in favor of Tilden were requested to rise. Glancing at those standing, a number of gentlemen were discerned who had voted in the morning division, thus giving "positive evidence" of that standard Democratic characteristic, "repeating." The Hayes men were then requested to rise, and it was so apparent that they were in the majority that the other side, fearing a count, attempted to give the gathering a Democratic appearance by howling in the usual convention style. Of course the Hayes men left in disgust, and thus put an end to the proceedings. I think this effectually disposes of the controversy.

WILLIAM A. CLARKE.

A WIFE DESERTING HER HUSBAND.

On Saturday last, Chief of Police Graul, of Paterson, N. J., received a telegram directing him to arrest a Mrs. Roe, who, with a nurse and two children, was traveling on an Erie Railway train to New-York City. The Chief found the lady on the train which reached Paterson at 3:37 o'clock P. M. She refused to be detained, explaining that she had left her husband, who she alleged was insane, and was then on her way to her father's house in New-York. The Chief did not feel warranted to interfere and let the party go on. A few hours later, Mr. W. J. Roe, a wealthy resident of New-Windsor, on the Hudson, arrived in Paterson with his counsel. He said that he had desired the Chief to hold the lady, who was his wife, for the abduction of the children. She had formed an acquaintance with a gentleman, of which Mr. Roe did not approve. He quarreled bitterly with her over the matter till she retaliated with charges of his mental unsoundness. Saturday morning, during his absence, she packed up her own and her children's clothing and went away. Mr. Roe was furious because the lady and children had not been detained, and took the next train for New-York City in pursuit of her. He says that his wife loves the children as only a mother can, and that she will take good care of them, but that he intends to assert his right to their custody.

THE HEINEMANN MALPRACTICE CASE.

An investigation into the circumstances attending the case of the young German woman, Mary Heinemann, who died from the effects of an abortion alleged to have been produced by Mrs. White, a midwife, at No. 209 Allen street, was made by Coroner Eickhoff yesterday. The ante-mortem statement of the girl, in which she acknowledged that Mrs. White had operated on her on three occasions—Oct 23, 26, and 27—was offered as evidence. Dr. Schapringer, house physician of the Mount Sinai Hospital, testified that Miss Heinemann at first denied that an abortion had been produced, but afterward confessed to him that she had gone to Mrs. White, who performed an operation on her. She had read Mrs. White's advertisement in the Staats Zeitung, and finding that she was about to become a mother, went to No. 209 Allen street for the express purpose of taking steps to hide her shame. Dr. Moses Mielziner, of No. 160 East Sixtieth street, in whose family the deceased had been employed as a servant, testified to the circumstances of the girl's illness, and added that he was ignorant of the cause of her sickness until informed by Dr. Hirsch, the attending physician, that she was suffering from inflammation of the bowels. Dr. Marsh, the Deputy Coroner, who made the post-mortem examination of the body, gave it as his opinion that death was due to metro-peritonitis following an abortion. Notwithstanding the dying statement of Miss Heinemann, two of the jurors returned a verdict that the allegation that the abortion had been produced by the prisoner had not been sustained by the testimony. Six of the jurors, on the other hand, held Mrs. White accountable for the death of the girl. The Coroner committed the prisoner to the Tombs to await the action of the Grand Jury, refusing a request of her counsel, Henry J. Appel, to accept bail.

A SINGULAR FATAL ACCIDENT.

John Higgins, living at No. 94 River street, Newark, came to his death under peculiar circumstances early Sunday morning. He and his wife had visited a family named Joyce, living in the same house. The evening was spent in drinking and dancing. Higgins had danced with Mrs. Joyce, and when they parted she swung him playfully in such a way that he fell on his stomach on the back of a chair. He complained of pain and repaired to his apartments to lie down. While engaged in disrobing he sat down on a chair and a few seconds later he expired. The County Physician was summoned. He was convinced that death was the result of an accident, and granted a permit for the burial of the remains.

Parties having already existing marks should have them registered within a year from the 14th of August, 1876. Any further details of interest to our manufacturers can be ascertained from the Consul General Edward F. Davison, New-York.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

RESULTS STILL UNCERTAIN.

A SOLID SOUTH EXCEPT LOUISIANA, FLORIDA AND SOUTH CAROLINA FOR THE DEMOCRACY—TILDEN CARRIES HIS OWN STATE, CONNECTICUT, AND INDIANA—THE NORTH DIVIDED.

At the hour of sending THE TIMES to press this morning, the result of the Presidential election, held yesterday, is still in doubt. Conceding to the Democrats New-York, New-Jersey, Connecticut, Indiana, and all the Southern States except Louisiana and South Carolina, Tilden will have 184 electoral votes. Necessary to elect, 185. The Republicans have carried the following States: Colorado, California, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nevada, Nebraska, New-Hampshire, Oregon, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, Wisconsin, Louisiana, and South Carolina. These States will give Hayes 181 electoral votes.

Elections were held yesterday for full lists of State officers in Connecticut, Illinois, Kansas, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska, New-York, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Tennessee. A Governor and Lieutenant-Governor were chosen in Florida, and a Secretary of State and other State officers in Iowa, it is safe to assume that in such case the results on the National and State Tickets are identical.

The returns for New-York from 256 towns and cities, outside of Kings and New-York Counties, give Tilden a net gain of 6,427, as compared with the vote of 1872. This indicates that the Democrats will carry the State by a small majority.

THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

THE RESULT IN DOUBT.

The number of Presidential Electors to which each State is entitled is equal to the whole number of its Senators and Representatives in Congress. The Electoral College this year will therefore consist of 369 members, and 185 votes will be required to elect. The following table shows how many Electors each State has, and how the electoral votes will be cast in the college:

THE NEXT CONGRESS.

ITS PROBABLE COMPLEXION—REPUBLICAN GAINS IN MEMBERSHIP.

The returns of the elections for members of Congress are still incomplete. The following summary of reported and estimated results concedes to the Democrats nearly all the doubtful districts, and later advices will probably increase the Republican membership. All the members have now been elected, except in New Hampshire, which will choose its three members in March next:

MISCELLANEOUS STATE RETURNS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PORT HENRY, Nov. 7.—We have carried Essex County by at least 1,500—a gain of 1,200 over the vote of 1874. In my own town, Moriah, we gain nearly 500 on a total vote of 1,400. We claim the banner. F. W. TOBEY.

UTICA, Nov. 7.—We have done nobly in Oneida. Hayes carries Utica by 50 majority. Rome gives Tilden 440 majority. We gain 100 in Whitestown and 100 in Kirkland. The County will give Hayes 2,000. Bacon is elected to Congress by about 1,500.

JAMAICA, Nov. 7.—The election throughout Queens County, so far as learned, has passed off with no disturbance of consequence, although the vote has been unusually large and work at the polls has been earnest and unremitting. The aggregate vote in Jamaica is 1,841, nearly five hundred more than ever cast in the town before, and reports from the other towns and Long Island City show a considerable increase all over the county.

COMSTOCK, Nov. 7.—Ex-Senator Baker is elected to the Assembly by one of the largest majorities ever given in this District, running ahead of the State and Electoral tickets. Hayes, Wheeler and Morgan have fully one thousand majority in the Assembly District—a large gain.

MALONE, Nov. 7.—Ten towns in this (Franklin) county give 854 majority for Hayes and Wheeler. Six towns more will increase it to twelve hundred certain.

TROY, Nov. 7.—Troy gives Tilden 1,267 majority. Rensselaer County is close, and probably Democratic. Burns (Dem.) is elected to the Assembly in the First District, and Filkins (Rep.) in the Second District. Townsend (Rep.) is elected to Congress in the Seventeenth District by about two thousand five hundred.

UTICA, Nov. 7.—We think our majority on Hayes will reach two thousand five hundred in Oneida County. The State Ticket runs from three to five hundred behind. Corbett in the First District, Case in the Second, and Moore in the Fourth, are elected to the Assembly—a Republican gain of one.

The returns show the election of W. J. Bacon in the Oneida district by a majority of from fifteen to eighteen hundred.

OSWEGO, Nov. 7.—Oswego City and nine towns indicate that the Republican State and Electoral ticket will have 3,000 majority in the county. Three Republican members of the Assembly are elected.

GENESEE Nov. 7.—Livingston County returns thus far received, eleven towns complete, with the First District of York and, the Second District of Livonia, foot up a total majority for Hayes of 918.

WATERTOWN, Nov. 7.—Jefferson County will give Hayes and Wheeler 2,200 majority certain. Returns are in from all but twelve election districts. Bagley is certainly re-elected to Congress, running ahead of his ticket. Skinner and Spicer are certainly elected to the Assembly.

OSWEGO, Nov. 7.—Tioga County gives fully 750 majority for Hayes. E. B. Gere is elected member of Assembly, and all the Republican county ticket is elected. J. W. Dwight is surely elected from this Congressional District.

NYACK, Nov. 7.—Rockland County gives a majority of about one thousand for the entire Democratic ticket.

JOHNSTOWN, Nov. 7.—Fulton County gives about 550 Republican majority for the Electoral ticket and Governor. Foy (Republican) is elected member of Assembly.

HAVANA, Nov. 7.—From returns so far received, the Republican majority on the electoral ticket in Schuyler County will be more than five hundred and fifty.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Nov. 7.—Dutchess County will give a Republican majority of about 500 for Hayes, and Morgan a trifle more. Ketcham is elected to Congress by a large majority. Webb and Hammond are both re-elected to the Assembly.

Several towns in this Congressional District have not been heard from, but the indications are that John H. Ketcham, Rep., will have about 3,000 majority.

ITHACA, Nov. 7.—At this hour, from official returns, there is little doubt that Hayes has from 900 to 1,000 majority in the county. Morgan probably has 100 less. Dwight, Rep., for Congress, nearly or quite up. Wickes, Rep., for Assembly, is elected by a small majority. The whole Republican county ticket is elected.

BUFFALO, Nov. 7.—Hayes' majority in this city is 212; Morgan about the same. Spaulding, for Congress, a tie; the county may possibly elect him. Sprague is elected to the Senate. Crowley and Langner (Dem.) are certainly elected to the Assembly, and Taber is probably. Gallagher and Orr (Rep.) are also elected.

PLATTSBURG, Nov. 7.—Williams' majority for Congress is about twenty-five hundred.

ALBANY, Nov. 7.—The result in this county shows a Democratic gain. Terence J. Quinn is elected to Congress over Harris by 1,200. The county ticket is defeated by the same majority. The Democrats elected their four members of Assembly, a Democratic gain of 2. Those elected are John Sage in the First, Jonathan R. Herrick in the Second, W. J. Maher in the Third, (re-elected,) Edward Curran in the Fourth. Tilden was voted for by Republicans all over the city, and was ahead of his ticket in Republican Wards.

OGDENSBURG, Nov. 7.—St. Lawrence will give Hayes and Wheeler 7,400 majority. Amaziah B. James, Rep., is elected by 8,500 majority. D. McFalls, in First District; A. B. Hayes' majority is 8,794; his plurality 8,720. In September the same towns gave the Republicans 35,537, and the Democrats 27,396, a Republican majority of 8,141. The Republican vote is nine per cent. smaller; the Democratic vote fourteen per cent. smaller. The aggregate vote is 55,952 in these towns, against 62,933 in September, a decrease of eleven per cent. If the remainder of the State gives the same ratio the aggregate vote will be about 121,000, of which the Republicans will have 69,000, the Democrats 52,000, a majority for Hayes of 17,000. In 1872 Grant had 61,426, and Greeley 29,097, making Grant's majority 32,328. In September of that year the vote stood: Republican 71,903, Democratic 55,343, a Republican majority of 16,537; but the Greeley vote fell away through demoralization, and Hayes will have 15,000 less of a majority than Grant had.

NEW-HAMPSHIRE.

THE STATE REPUBLICAN BY AT LEAST 2,000.

BOSTON, Nov. 7.—Republican special dispatches from New-Hampshire claim that State by 2,000.

CONCORD, Nov. 7.—Thirty-five towns and cities gives Hayes 5,944 Tilden, 5,172; scattering, 3. In 1872 the same places gave Grant 5,314; Greeley, 4,536; scattering, 17. The Republican net loss in these places is 6.

Seventy towns and cities give Hayes 12,254; Tilden, 11,371; scattering, 25. In 1872, the same places gave Grant 10,975; Greeley, 9,684; scattering, 66; a Republican net loss in these places of 368.

8 P. M.—The incoming returns continue very favorable for the Republicans. The excitement is intense. Ex-Gov. Harriman, from reports received up to 7:30, predicts that Hayes and Wheeler will carry New Hampshire by a majority of 2,500.

One hundred and five towns and cities gives Hayes, 19,625; Tilden, 17,386; scattering, 54. In 1872 the same places gave Grant, 17,366; Greeley, 14,675; scattering, 150. Republican net loss in these places, 356.

9 P. M.—One hundred and forty towns and cities give Hayes 30,368, Tilden 26,785, scattering 59. In 1872 the same places gave Grant 26,951, Greeley 21,863, scattering 222. Republican net loss in these places 1,352.

10 P. M.—There is little or no excitement over the election here to-night, except in the Republican and Democratic head-quarters and the newspaper offices, all of which are crowded with people. Returns have been received from 150 towns, which indicate that the State has gone for Hayes by from 2,500 to 3,000 majority. The Republicans claim that it will reach the latter figures, while the Democrats concede a majority for the Republicans of from 2,000 to 2,500. The total vote will be about the same as last Spring, and it is probable that the majority may be about the same. The following is a summary of 150 towns: Hayes, 31,712; Tilden, 28,196; scattering, 63. The sames places last Spring gave Cheney, Rep., 31,701; Marcy, Dem., 27,617; scattering, 343, making a Republican net loss in these towns of 288.

VERMONT.

HAYES' MAJORITY PROBABLY FROM 25,000 TO 27,000.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BURLINGTON, Nov. 7.—The returns from the State come in slowly, but indicate a light vote, and that Hayes will have from 25,000 to 27,000 majority.

WHITE RIVER JUNCTION, Nov. 7.—Returns from eighty-nine towns give Hayes 25,256; Tilden, 12,379; scattering, 14. Same towns gave in 1872, Grant, 23,537; Greeley, 6,810; O'Conor, 216. Hayes' majority over Tilden 12,863. Hayes' gain over Grant, 1,720. Tilden's majority over Greeley and O'Conor, 5,353. The 152 towns to be heard from gave Grant 17,945. Grant's majority over Greeley and O'Conor was about thirty thousand in 1872.

Castleton, Rutland County, Vt., gives a complete Republican majority of 121.

MASSACHUSETTS.

HAYES' MAJORITY 30,000—LARGE REPUBLICAN GAIN IN CONGRESSMEN—GENS. BANKS AND BUTLER ELECTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Nov. 7.—Massachusetts can be counted on for at least 30,000 majority for Hayes and Wheeler. The full State ticket is elected, with Rice's majority well sustained. The Prohibition and other factions, headed by John J. Baker, polled a large vote, as was expected, but not sufficient to affect Mr. Rice's election in the slightest. It is impossible at this hour to figure the Republican majorities, a good deal of scratching having been indulged in all over the State.

The Congressional districts show somewhat surprising results. In the First and Second Districts the Republican majorities have been well sustained, Mr. Crapo in the First, and Mr. Harris in the Second, having been re-elected by handsome figures. In the Third District, one of the Boston districts, the result is surprising and disappointing. Mr. Walbridge A. Field, the Republican candidate, has been defeated by Mr. Benjamin Dean—cause, his resolute determination not to put out money for the support and nourishment of torchlight battalions, his conviction being that it was not an honorable or dignified course. The other Boston District is also lost. The Fourth, Mr. Leopold Morse being elected over Hon. Rufus S. Frost by about 600 majority. There are charges of repeating and ballot-box stuffing in this district, and a contested election case may grow out of it. The power of money in this district was great. All the other districts are Republican. Gen. Banks is elected in the Fifth, but by what majority is not yet known. Dr. George B. Loring is elected in the Sixth by about 1,200 majority. Gen. Butler is elected in the Seventh by a handsome majority, and Lowell and Lawrence are wild with excitement. Ex Gov. Claflin is elected in the Eighth by a large majority. W. W. Rice is elected in the Ninth by 2,000 majority. Amasa Norcross is elected in the Tenth by one of the largest majorities received by a Republican Congressman, and Lucius M Robinson is elected in the Eleventh, over Chester W. Chapin, by 1,500 majority.

The State Legislature is largely Republican, with a little more Prohibition in it than is pleasant.

The cities are crowded with people to-night, and there is much excitement abroad. The Republicans held a large meeting in Faneuil Hall, and speeches were made by Gens. Banks and Butler. There was great enthusiasm.

BOSTON, Nov. 7—12 M.—In 200 towns Hayes has 25,000 majority. Rice is elected to Congress. The Republicans have carried every Congressional District except the two in Boston. Dean, Democrat, is elected to succeed Pierce, and Morse, Democrat, is elected in the Fourth District.

MISCELLANEOUS RETURNS.

BOSTON, Nov. 7.—The Evening Journal says Crapo, Rep., has been re-elected to Congress in the First District by a large majority, and that Harris, Rep., is elected to Congress from the Second District.

Leopold Morse, Dem., is probably elected to Congress in the Fourth District by a small majority.

The election of Claflin (Rep.) in the Eighth Congressional District and Loring (Rep.) in the Sixth District is claimed by the Traveller.

In Ninety-six towns of Massachusetts Hayes has 36,230; Tilden, 21,953; Rice, 32,764; Adams, 21,153; Baker, 3,662. The returns so far received, according to a Republican estimate, indicate the election of Gov. Rice by a good majority.

Banks, Rep., is elected in the Fifth Congressional District; Butler, Rep., in the Seventh District; Claflin, Rep., in the Eighth, and Norcross, Rep., in the Tenth.

BOSTON, Nov. 7.—Returns indicate that a very heavy vote has been cast. One hundred and twenty-three towns give Hayes 51,494; Tilden, 31,601; Rice, 47,308; Adams, 30,379, and Baker 4,573. Butler in the Seventh District, Banks in the Fifth, Claflin in the Eighth, Crapo in the First, Robinson in the Eleventh, Rice in the Ninth, and Norcross in the Tenth are elected to Congress as Republicans. Harris in the Second District and Loring in the Sixth, both Republican, are probably elected. Dean in the Third and Morse in the Fourth District, Democrats, are probably elected.

The present Congressional delegation stands: Republicans, 5; Democrats, 6; a Republican gain or 4 Congressmen, and, if the vote continues in the same ratio, it will carry the State for Hayes by a plurality of 50,000.

Returns from 163 towns and cities give Hayes 66,893; Tilden, 43,436; Rice, 61,534; Adams, 41,961; Baker, 5,831.

The following is the vote of Boston, all but one ward: Hayes, 19,138; Tilden, 22,206; Rice, 18,073; Adams, 21,575; Baker, 1,135.

10 P. M.—One hundred and ninety-seven towns give Hayes 95,578; Tilden, 70,644; Rice, 88,804; Adams, 70,903; Baker, 8,085.

Four counties complete give sixty-one Republican and ten Democratic members of the Legislature.

All but three towns in the Fifth District give Banks 9,741; Frothingham, 9,155. Other towns will increase Banks' majority about 200. The Third District elects Dean, Dem., for Congress, by 43 plurality; Morse, Dem., is also elected in the Fourth District. Butler, in the Seventh District, has about 3,000 plurality over Tarbox and Hoar.

12 M.—The Legislative returns are 166 Republicans, 48 Democrats, and 1 Prohibitionist. Twenty-five districts, which are entitled to twenty-seven Representatives, are yet to be heard from.

The latest estimates give Hayes 35,000 plurality in the State.

The First Congressional District, 31 towns, (12 to hear from) gives Crapo, Rep., 12,226 and Day, Dem., 5,059. In the Second Congressional District, 31 towns (7 to hear from) give Harris, Rep., 11,116 and Avery, Dem., 7,436. The Third Congressional District complete gives Field, Rep., 9,266, and Dean, Dem., 9,308. The Fifth Congressional District complete gives Banks, Rep., 13,324, and Frothingham, Dem., 12,304. In the Sixth Congressional District, twenty-eight towns, (two to hear from,) give Loring, Rep., 5,752, and Thompson, Dem., 5,207. In the Seventh Congressional District, thirty-six towns (nine to hear from) give Butler 7,242, Tarbox 3,596, and Hoar 1,105. The Eighth Congressional District complete gives Claflin, Rep., 13,298, and Warren, Dem., 12,148. The Ninth Congressional District complete gives Rice, Rep., 13,891, and Verey, Dem., 10,205. The Tenth Congressional District, sixty-five towns (4 to hear from) give Norcross, Rep., 7,997 and Lamb, Dem., 6,424. In the Eleventh Congressional District, 51 towns (15 to hear from) give Robinson, Rep., 7,085 and Chapin, Dem., 5,652.

The election in this city was quiet, though the streets were filled with people.

RHODE ISLAND.

HAYES' MAJORITY 5,000—EAMES AND BALLOU RE-ELECTED TO CONGRESS—THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS REJECTED.

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 7.—Partial returns from all parts of the State show that Hayes will have from 5,000 to 6,000 majority. Eames and Ballou, Republican Congressmen, are both re-elected by a large vote. There have been no disturbances. All three of the State constitutional amendments are rejected.

CONNECTICUT.

A CLOSE VOTE—THE STATE DEMOCRATIC BY A REDUCED MAJORITY—REPUBLICAN GAINS IN THE LEGISLATURE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARTFORD, Nov. 7.—Meriden shows a Republican gain of 243. Hartford gives Tilden 986 majority, but Landers has only 607 over Hawley for Congress in this, the First District.

Thirty-nine towns give Hayes 693 majority, and Robinson for Governor, 570. Hayes has 14,397, and Tilden 13,335 in fifty-nine towns. Hayes' majority, 1,062.

The returns look as if the Legislature might be Republican.

Gen. Hawley's election is claimed by about 100 majority, estimating the vote in three or four towns in Tolland County.

10 P. M.—The returns continue to come in slowly, but every evidence points to a grand Republican victory. At this hour sixty-eight towns have been heard from, which give a total vote for Hayes of 19,060, and for Tilden 18,436, a gain over the October elections of 1,801.

In Meriden, a manufacturing town of this State, a fierce fight was waged, capital putting itself against labor, and nearly succeeding in winning the fight. Hayes received 1,599 votes, against 1,572 for Tilden. Lynde Harrison, for many years Chairman of the Republican State Central Committe, has been returned to the House by a handsome majority.

Fifty-nine towns, including Meriden, the only city yet reporting, gives Hayes 14,397, Tilden 13,335; Hayes' majority, 1,062. Hayes' vote over Robinson, last Spring, 3,289; Tilden over Ingersoll, 1,190. These fifty-nine towns gave a Democratic majority last Spring of 1,023. Republican gain 2,090.

The weather has been entirely against the polling of a full Republican vote. Indisputable evidence is at hand of the generous distribution of corruption funds for the Cities of Meriden, New Haven, Bridgeport, Norwich, and other manufacturing towns. Evidently Barnum and Tilden have drained their stables to supply "mules" for this election. Bridgeport makes a Democratic gain of 198, largely due to the corrupt use of campaign funds. The Republicans lose 650 in Middlesex County from the vote of 1872, but make a gain of 205 over the vote of April. New-Haven gains 800 on the Democratic vote. There is, to offset this, a net Republican gain of 3,137 in 112 towns on the Gubernatorial ticket.

10:30 P. M.—Reports from 119 towns give Hayes a majority of 200. Never was a closer vote polled in the State. The returns from the First District indicate that Hawley, for Congress, is defeated by about 70 majority.

11 P. M.—The Senate is Republican by a majority of one. The Republicans elected but two Senators last Spring, and now they elect eleven. No doubt is felt that the House is also Republican. Last Spring the Democrats had ninety-eight majority on joint ballot.

One hundred and twenty towns give Hayes 41,478; Tilden, 42,294; Robinson, 39,737; Hubbard, 40,911. It is evident that the Democrats have carried the State by greatly reduced majorities, though it is possible that Hubbard, for Governor, may not have a clear majority over all, and, in that case, the Legislature must decide, which will elect Robinson.

The Hartford Times concedes the election of Hawley, but his friends do not so figure it.

11:30 P. M.—The Senate and House, so far as heard from, are Republican.

Kellogg, the Republican candidate for Congress in the Second District, is undoubtedly defeated by Phelps.

Hubbard, Rep., in the Fourth, is defeated, beyond a doubt, by Warner.

Wart, the Republican candidate in the Third District, is returned to Congress by an increased majority.

The latest, at 11:30, from 125 towns, gives Tilden 848 over Hayes, and 1,211 for Hubbard over Robinson.

THE VOTE IN THE CITY.

GOV. TILDEN'S MAJORITY ABOUT 53,000.

A FULL REPUBLICAN VOTE POLLED—THE ENTIRE DEMOCRATIC COUNTY TICKET PROBABLY ELECTED.

The polls were thrown open in the City at 6 o'clock yesterday morning, and at that hour a number of voters had already collected. Considerable rain had fallen during the night, and the weather on election morning was as disagreeable as the most enthusiastic Democrat could desire. It rained, with only short intermissions, during the entire day, and the appearance of the streets was anything but inviting. The too often well-deserved reproach of Republicans being kept from the polls by bad weather does not seem to be applicable to the present election, the returns showing that the Republican vote of this year is over three thousand heavier than that polled for President Grant in 1872. The Democratic vote in this County, however, was overwhelming, and Gov. Tilden's majority is probably over 53,000. The vote of Lucius Robinson, the Democratic candidate for Governor, is nearly equal to that of Mr. Tilden, while Mr. Smith Ely, Jr., the Tammany candidate for Mayor, leads the ticket by about 2,000. These votes have been taken from Gen. Dix, who falls about that number behind Edwin D. Morgan, the Republican candidate for Governor. The entire County ticket has probably been elected by a large majority. Full reports of the City vote will be given in later editions.

THE VOTE IN BROOKLYN.

TILDEN'S MAJORITY OVER SEVENTEEN THOUSAND—HON. S. B. CHITTENDEN PROBABLY ELECTED TO CONGRESS—CHANCES OF REPUBLICAN COUNTY TICKET.

The election in Brooklyn passed off quietly, but comparatively few arrests being made for illegal voting. The rain-storm had the effect of decreasing the Republican vote to some extent, but the percentage of those who registered and failed to vote was much smaller than in former years. Great crowds assembled in the vicinity of the head-quarters of both political parties, and in the rooms of both a throng of people waited anxiously to hear the returns read off. The figures came in slowly. Following is the vote for President by wards and county towns, with Flatlands, New-Utrecht, and Gravesend to be heard from:

Tilden's majority					17,972

The indications at present are that Tanner, Rep., who has run largely ahead of his ticket, will defeat Barre for Register. The remainder of the Republican County ticket is probably defeated with the possible exception of Walter L. Livingstone for Surrogate. No figures have been received on the Aldermanic Ticket, but reports brought in by men who stood near the polls all day gave a majority of the Board to the Republicans. On the City Ticket no figures have yet been received. In the Third Congressional District, Gen. Dakin polled a large vote, but although but few figures have come in, the indications are that Chittenden is elected by a good majority. In the Second Congressional District, Veeder, Democrat, is probably elected over Cavanagh, Republican. In the Fourth Congressional District, Bliss, Democrat, is elected over Spitzer, Republican. The State ticket will fall about 5,000 behind the Presidential ticket.

THE LATEST.

At two o'clock this morning no definite figures had been received at the head-quarters, except those giving the vote for the electoral tickets. The figures have not come in so slowly in years. The latest returns indicate that Berri, Dem., for Register, is elected by a small majority. The contest for Surrogate is still in doubt, as is the result on the City ticket between Mr. Ropes, Rep., and Mr. Burrell, Dem. The following Congressmen are probably elected: Second District, Veeder, Dem.; Third District, Chittenden, Rep.; Fourth District, Bliss, Dem.

The Assemblymen probably elected are as follows:

1. Bradley, Ind.
2. Marin, Rep.
3. Shandley, Dem.
4. Tighe, Dem.
5. Stevenson, Rep.
6. Worth, Rep.
7. Lyon, Dem.
8. Suydam, Rep.
9. McGroarty, Dem.

Nothing definite will be known as to the result in the odd wards until to-day, but the indications are slightly in favor of the Republicans. Following is an estimate on the State and County tickets.

WAITING FOR THE RETURNS.

SCENES AROUND THE NEWSPAPER OFFICES AND AT THE HOTELS—ENTHUSIASM AND GOOD NATURE IN SPITE OF THE RAIN.

The vicinity of the offices of the large daily newspapers of this City was scarcely ever before so densely crowded as last night, and it is very long since the down-town section of the City has been visited by so many people after nightfall. From Broadway and Fulton street to Tryon row the crowds passed back and forth in the glare of numerous calcium lights. They stopped in front of every bulletin, and roared in unison, no matter what was recorded on the boards. The scene was, indeed, picturesque. On every side the horizon was reddened by the reflections of bon-fires that were kept alight by enthusiasts in defiance of the determined efforts of the rain to quench them. Near the newspaper offices the faces of the excited people could be seen in the bright light thrown upon the bulletins, and it was easy to note their various emotions as the figures were placed upon the boards. The presence of the immense crowds in the background could only be learned when they cheered, so profound was the darkness by which they were invested, or when the calcium lights were temporarily shifted. From THE TIMES office the assemblage stretched as far diagonally as the City Hall Park. It was a jovial crowd, determined to have some fun no matter what party carried the election. The various elements sympathized with the enthusiasm of each other, and every cheer that came from the van was re-echoed by the rear-guard. When no new figures were upon the bulletin they chaffed one another, stirred up the wrath of the drivers of belated cars, and then laughed at their abjurgations, or terrified some thoughtless fellow who had raised an umbrella in their front. Umbrellas were only raised by the timid who composed the fringe of the assemblage. Thus the crowd played and cheered until the early hours of the morning. They applauded every time that a figure was put upon the bulletins, but as there was no division in the applause it was easy to be seen that they put but little faith in the returns. Most of the sober-minded who discussed the election agreed that, however many figures might be given last night, they must of necessity be imperfect, and that no definite statement of the result in the country at large could be had before to-day.

AT THE FIFTH AVENUE HOTEL.

The scenes at the Republican Head-quarters in the Fifth Avenue Hotel were such as are only witnessed at the close of a great political campaign. Despite the drizzling rain an immense throng gathered in front of the building for the purpose of hearing whatever election returns might be announced, and they waited patiently hour after hour, in order to be enabled to arrive at some definite result. Not only the square in front of the hotel, but all the streets in the vicinity were blocked up with seekers after information as to the election. Hundreds of persons remained along the sidewalks and in the middle of the thoroughfares, moving only when the Broadway cars came up or down at the points they occupied. The vast assemblage was not only quiet, but accommodating. They had evidently come to "sit out" the returns, for they held umbrellas over them for several hours. In the hotel the scenes were of an equally animated character. The vestibules, corridors, and passages leading to the National and State Committee-rooms were crowded. These rooms are situated in opposite wings of the building, and the space between them was thronged by persons who moved to and fro in search of the latest dispatches. All the rooms were filled with eager listeners who had gathered there at dusk and held their places until after midnight. The spectacles presented in the saloon of the building, and also in the reading-room, were very animated. Private dispatches were received from various States by gentlemen from their friends, and those of an encouraging character created loud applause. Among the Republicans at the hotel were Hon. Thurlow Weed, Gen. Arthur, Hon. W. M. Evarts, Major Gen. Sickles, Elliott C. Cowdin, Judge Dittenhoefer, Sheridan Shook, and District Attorney Bliss.

THE BRITISH ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

THE DISPATCH SENT TO THE ADMIRALTY—ARRIVAL OF THE ALERT AT VALENTIA—RECEPTION OF THE OFFICERS AND MEN.

From the London News, Oct. 28.

The following telegram from Rear Admiral Hillyar, at Queenstown, was received at the Admiralty at 5:45 P. M. yesterday: "Just received from Capt. Nares, of Alert.—'Arrived at Valentia; all well. Pole impracticable. No land to northward; otherwise voyage successful. Highest latitude, 83.20. Alert proceeds to Queenstown. Discovery expected hourly.'"

The following telegram from Valentia has been forwarded to us by a member of the expedition: "We have not reached the pole. The passage was impracticable. We Wintered in 82° 27'. The highest latitude reached by the sledges was 83° 20'. The highest land, 83° 7': the furthest west, 85° longitude. Lady Franklin Straits is a bay. No President's Land exists. Peterman Fiord was stopped by glacier. The most northern point of Greenland seen was 82° 57'."

Our correspondent at Valentia sends us the following telegram, dated last night: "This morning the Alert, one of the two vessels which left England seventeen months ago on the Arctic Expedition, arrived in this harbor. The following are the details of her voyage: After leaving Port Foulke, on the 29th July, 1875, she entered the ice off Cape Sabine. After a severe and continuous struggle she reached the north side of Lady Franklin Bay, where the Discovery was left in Winter quarters. The Alert reached the limit of navigation on the shore of the Polar Sea, the ice varying up to 150 feet thick. President's Land does not exist. She Wintered in 82° 27'. The sun was absent 142 days. Spring traveling was intensely laborious; a detachment journeying northward over the Polar floes was absent seventy days, and reached 83° 20'. The party rounded Cape Columbia, the extreme northern point of American land, and traced the shore 220 miles west. Greenland was explored far to the eastward. The sledgers all suffered from scurvy. They met no game. Hans Christian Petersen died of frost-bite; George Porter, of the Alert; James Hand and Charles Paul, of the Discovery, died while sledging. There were no Esquimaux met with. All traces of them ceased north of 81° 52'. No icebergs were seen beyond Cape Union. Only one bear was seen during the absence from the ship. So rugged was the ice that sledgers could only advance one mile a day; but they reached latitude 83° 20' after a terrible struggle, being within 400 miles of the Pole. While in Winter quarters parties from the ship made rich natural history collections, and numbers of valuable scientific observations were taken. Coal, too, was found of excellent quality near the Discovery, and fossil remains of coral were found in the extreme north. The expedition experienced the coldest weather ever registered, the temperature being 59° below zero for a fortnight. The extreme lowest temperature on any day was 104° below freezing-point. The Alert put into Valentia in consequence of her rudder shifting. She sighted the Pandora all well south of Cape Farewell on Oct. 16; screw slightly damaged by the ice. The Pandora called at the stations on Littleton Island and Cape Isabella, but was unable to reach Cape Sabine. The expedition not calling at Littleton Island on returning missed the letters left there by the Pandora. The Alert parted company with the Discovery on the 19th. The latter has gone on to Queenstown. The health of crew, with the exceptions referred to above, has been good. Frostbites were severe but not numerous. Scurvy attacked several of the sledge parties of the expedition. There was no sickness on the ice. Petersen, the interpreter, died forty days after the amputation of both feet for frost-bite. Among the curiosities brought home by the officers of the Alert is a specimen of wheat deposited by the Polaris, when that vessel was quartered in the Arctic regions. Both officers and crew speak in unmeasured praise of Capt. Nares. He has in anxious times been on deck with the exception of a few hours, night and day, for the thirty days, encouraging and assisting his well-tried crew. Upon arriving at Valentia, Capt. Nares with three officers left immediately by special train to meet the evening express from Killarney en route to London. He takes with him many interesting relics of the expedition—photographs, charts, &c. A touching memorial has been erected by the officers and crew of the expedition over the graves of their deceased comrades, photographs of which have been taken and preserved. The absence of fresh meat for such a lengthened period has been much felt by all, and next to home the sight of mutton has been the long-desired wish of their hearts. An old whaler of great Arctic experience, who has been no less than twenty-five times to the Arctic circle, declares that no other expedition has ever obtained such satisfactory results as the present, and its success has been much more than he anticipated. He says the Pole, of which they were within 400 miles, is surrounded by ice the thickness of which he actually gave as 200 feet. The opinion of all connected with the expedition is that to reach the Pole or to do more than has been done by the Alert and Discovery is simply impracticable."

The same correspondent sends the following additional particulars: "The Alert parted with her consort owing to severe weather in the Atlantic. In latitude 81° 30' they met with icebergs 200 feet deep. Both ships were at this time about sixty-seven miles apart, each sending out separate sleigh expeditions on the ice, which, looking northward, appeared interminable. Each took a different route. They returned to their respective ships after great exertion, one party having been away eighty-four days, and the other seventy-five, and in each case the men were in a very helpless condition, the officers being obliged to bring some of them back on the sleighs. In this high latitude they have not met many living things. They saw some traces of the Esquimaux. Scarcely any fowls were obtained. They were exclusively used for invalids suffering from scurvy. The meeting between the inhabitants and the officers and men was of the most cordial description. The Alert was not identified for some time, though flying the white ensign. The whole of her planking shows signs that she has suffered considerably from the ice, and her rudders (for she had a spare one) have both been very much damaged. One of these is at present being temporarily repaired to enable her to reach Queenstown, whither she proceeds for coal and to join her consort, the Discovery. The officers of the Alert were warmly welcomed and hospitably received by the staff of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company. The Alert has been visited by crowds during the day, and the courtesy of all on board is the common topic. While I write, the officers and men are being fêted by the neighboring gentry and the inhabitants, who are vieing with each other to do the utmost honor to the brave fellows just returned from the highest latitude ever yet reached in the Arctic regions."

SHORT SIGHT IN SCHOOL CHILDREN.

RESULTS OF CAREFUL EXAMINATIONS IN THE PRIMARY AND GRAMMAR SCHOOLS OF PORTLAND.

In the Proceedings of the Maine Medical Association for 1876 is to be found a paper by Dr. James A. Spaulding on short sight in Portland school-children. The writer says:

"For some time past, I have been occupied in making an examination of the sight of the children in the various primary and grammar schools of this city. It had also been my intention to examine the scholars in the high schools, but owing to some mistakes and misunderstandings, nothing was done in these schools. The method of examination was as follows: Each scholar was tested singly with Sneller's Test Type, at twenty feet distance, in a bright room. Those whose sight was in any way affected were in this way sifted out from those with good sight. After this had been carefully done, in some cases by the teachers, to whose accuracy and case I owe many thanks, and in some by myself, I tested each scholar with defective sight with the series of larger test type, found the exact proportional amount of sight, and then corrected it by convex or concave glasses, as the case might demand. Where no improvement could be obtained by either concave or convex glasses, astigmatic glasses were tried. Some of the scholars with defective vision, which could not be corrected by glasses, were examined with the ophthalmoscope. In regard to the latter point, I regret that I was unable to make more extended search. In all, 2,372 children were thus tested.

The results may be thus briefly stated: In the grammar schools I found 20 per cent. of the children with defective sight, and in the primary schools 8½ per cent. Of these 20 per cent. in the grammar schools. I found 16 per cent. in all who were at all short-sighted, while 10 per cent. of the whole required glasses stronger than 36 inches focus to correct the myopia present. Of the 8½ per cent. in the primary schools, I found 7 per cent. who were short-sighted, and of the whole, 3½ per cent. who required glasses stronger than 36 inches focus. To repeat, there was 10 per cent. myopia, requiring a glass stronger than 36 inches focus for correction in the Grammar Schools, in children from ten to fifteen years of age, and three and a half in the Primary Schools, in children from five to ten years of age. Myopia was more common, in the proportion of five to four, among girls than boys, especially in the higher degrees. In quite a number of cases of high degrees of myopia it was impossible by any kind of glasses to bring about perfect sight; thus showing that short sight in high degrees is united with a defect of visual power, and is not a blessing, as some people will persist in insisting upon.

I have not thought it advisable to make a table of the other causes of defective vision, as hypermetropia, astigmatism or amblyopia, nor have I counted in as defective any children in any way temporarily afflicted with inflammatory diseases to which we are all liable. Suffice it to say that, with very few exceptions, the eyes of all the children I examined were found in a surprisingly healthy state. My idea, when I began testing the school-children, was simply to find how much short sight could be found among them, and if I found it in any amount to say a few words about it.

The first point on which I would speak is lighting the school-rooms. How then are they off for light? In reply it may be said that some of them are remarkably well lighted, and noticeably, those of the North School, where the light comes in brightest from one side and from the other side and rear in subdued amount; some are moderately well lighted, as those in the High School building with equal light from both sides; but where the windows are not cut up high enough toward the ceiling, they do not let in light enough on a gloomy day to make the middle rows of seats desirable for any scholars at all, even those with the sharpest eyesight; while some, and especially the Park Street Grammar School, are miserably lighted. In this school the light strikes directly into the faces of the scholars, and also directly upon their backs. They thus have a glare in front, and a shadow thrown from behind. In this school, and in a school similarly lighted on Brackett street, I found the greatest percentage of defective sight. It always seems to me just as absurd to read with the face directed toward the brightest source of light, thus placing the eyes in the most disadvantageous position possible, as it would be to weigh down one's self with fetters when going walking.

It is useless to suggest that the teachers of a crowded school might find time to watch the scholars with defective sight, to see that they do not hold their books too close to their eyes, or to make them hold their books up from the desk and parallel to their faces, or to prevent too long and unremitting search for unimportant places in an atlas. But what the teachers can do and ought to do is this: every scholar known to have defective sight ought to have a seat in the very best light in the room, irrespective of what class each may belong to. I would range the defective-sighted scholars along each outer row of desks, as near to the windows as possible, where the light comes from the sides; while in those schools which are so unfortunate as to have the light from the front and back both, I would put them on the rows of seats nearest the back windows.

In every school there should be a rest every half-hour, if even for a minute only, from reading, and especially from writing and drawing, the pursuit of which, for a steady hour, is wearisome enough to a practiced eye, and much more so to all young beginners, who strain, as it were, at each point in a line, so as to make it as nearly like the copy as possible. Fine hand-writing ought never to have been invented, and especially in the ruled-off way—the measured space way—in which it is taught now-a-days. Any child, taught a large, round, flowing hand, will soon learn enough to make it proportionately smaller and smaller, as space and paper demand.

In examining a few of the scholars who wore glasses, I was struck with the unusual and unnecessary strength of their glasses. Too strong glasses require too much exertion of the eye. Glasses for short-sighted persons should be the weakest possible with which they can see clearly at a distance, while for reading they should, except in some rare cases, be still weaker.

Shall we give glasses for reading, in short-sight? For children whose sight can be perfectly corrected by concave glasses, that is, if there be no amblyopia as a result of myopic distention of the eye-ball, with changes in the inner tunics of the eye, and if the eye has good power of accommodating itself for near objects, I see no objection to their wearing glasses; and with this advantage, that, if worn early in life, they will in all probability prevent a further increase of the myopia. After twenty years of age, and with advancing age, they may be diminished in strength, or even convex glasses may be worn.

But, after all, the only place to teach children how to use their eyes well—how not to abuse them—ought to be at home. They should be taught that the light should always come from the side, or even over the shoulder; that the book should be held up if possible, and never in the lap; that they should always have a shade over a lamp standing on a table at a level with their eyes, and especially if they have to face the light, as in writing; and that all bending positions, and reading in the twilight, or with the sunlight pouring over the book, are very harmful to the eyes.

In some of the school-children I found myopia hereditary, being traceable to parents and even grandparents, and the points just mentioned about the use and abuse of the eyes cannot be too strongly urged upon parents and taught by them to their children, when they know that they themselves have defective vision and that it is often hereditary, descending to their children in increased degree unless carefully watched.

It is useless to create a panic about short sight, or to say that, with advancing education, we are growing a race of short-sighted persons. It is wrong to accuse the schools as the sole cause of all cases of short sight. That would be carrying a few facts, a few statistics, to an unwarranted extreme. Hereditary influence I believe to be of great effect in causing short sight, while bad light at night at home, poor light in the school-rooms, want of care in selecting well-printed books, urging girls too much to learn fine sewing and embroidery, too long-continued and unrested work at school, too strong glasses given by opticians, and many bodily ails and weaknesses, as scarlatina and measles, are other factors always busy in producing and continuing short sight, all of which may, with care and thoughtfulness, be to some extent obviated, and naturally at no better time than during the years at school."

A CLOAK OF FEATHERS.

The Kingston Freeman says: "There is an industrious young lady in the country who is making a cloak almost entirely of partridge feathers. It will be a unique piece of clothing and very pretty and comfortable, though it requires an immense amount of labor and perseverance to put it together. It will be at least ten thousand feathers of different sizes, the lower portion being made of the tail feathers, and then ranging up, the breast feathers come next, while the variegated plumage around the neck of the bird will encircle the white throat of the lady. It will require about one hundred partridges to fill out the regular courses of feathers. The birds are shot by her brother Bill, who pops them over whenever she wants them, only asking that she will nicely cook what is left for himself to make a square meal of."

THE LOST CAUSE AND COMMON SENSE.

AN ALLEGED DEFAULT OF THE UNITED STATES—THE CONFEDERATE LOAN.

From the London Economist.

We have received a copy of a well written pamphlet, by a gentleman who has recently objected to the quotation of the 4½ per cent. Funding Loan of the United States Government on the Stock Exchange, on the ground that that Government was bound to recognize the Confederate Loan, and was in default for not having done so. The Stock Exchange Committee have decided against the writer, and now he appeals to the public. We can hardly think that the writer's objections were urged with any real hope of success, as the Confederate Loan is now a forgotten affair, but the issue of the pamphlet is perhaps of interest nevertheless, as a sign of the tenacity with which lost causes are adhered to, although the common sense of mankind is against them. It is quite obvious that the United States cannot be in default on account of a loan which it never issued, and which was issued in order to oppose it by people who, in its eyes, had no more authority to do so than a burglar has to pledge the property of a house he has broken into with a view to further operations of a similar kind. The owner of a house in such circumstances, when he regains his property, can hardly be expected to acknowledge that the burglar's mortgages of it are valid. Of course, it may be said that the Confederate authorities were not wrong doers, and exercised a legal right, but that is to beg the whole question respecting which the attitude of the United States has always been unequivocal. Even in the case of a regular war we should doubt if the conquering State is under any well-established obligation to recognize the debts of the defeated party when it takes part of the territory. At the close of the Franco-German war the Germans annexed Alsace-Lorraine, but they did not assume the burden of any proportionate part of the French debt, and if they had annexed a still larger part of French soil, we may be sure that they would have considered their own claims as preferable to those of the creditors of their enemy. The truth is, that when people lend to Governments, the risk of the Government being destroyed or impoverished by foreign war, is one of the risks they run, and they should be careful to deal with Governments which are not likely to encounter such disasters.

THE SON OF AN AMERICAN ADMIRAL.

The London Telegraph says: "Arthur Douglas Dent, about twenty, was charged before Mr. Vaughan with being drunk and incapable. A Constable proved the charge against the defendant. The Magistrate ordered the young man to pay a fine of five shillings. He then said that, on being called in the morning, he was surprised to find that he had enlisted in the Marines over night. He wished to know what he could do. He was the son of an American Admiral, was now traveling for pleasure in England, and, unless he had been drunk at the time, he would never have enlisted. The enlistment paper that he handed in to the Magistrate was signed at 5:30, and the defendant was taken into custody at 6:30. Mr. Vaughan said that as he was drunk an hour after he had enlisted, it certainly would seem as though he was the worse for drink before he did so. The Magistrate then put back the case in order that the recruiting Sergeant might be sent for. When the sergeant of Marines arrived, he handed to his worship the enlistment paper, which was in the defendant's handwriting. Mr. Vaughan remarked that the writing was not that of a drunken man. Defendant looked at the paper, and admitted that there was nothing wrong with the writing. All he could go by was the fact that on waking up in the morning he was entirely ignorant of the fact that he had enlisted, and did not know it till the Inspector at the station gave him the paper that had been found on him. Mr. Vaughan said he could only advise the defendant to be more careful for the future. It would appear that he had had too much to drink when he enlisted, though the writing did not show that he was drunk, and therefore it he did not wish to remain in the service he must follow the ordinary course and pay the 'smart' money, [£1 1s.] This, together with the fine of five shillings was at once paid, and the defendant left the court."

HENRY M. STANLEY DENOUNCED.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

It is satisfactory to learn that the attention of the Government has been called to Mr. Stanley's proceedings in Central Africa, and that steps will be taken to repudiate the apparent responsibility which that "pioneer of civilization" has in a wholly unauthorized manner contrived to fix upon this country. A memorial has been addressed to Lord Derby on this subject by the committees of the Aborigines Protection and Anti-Slavery Societies, and the official answer to it has just been published. It states that "His Lordship has read with great regret reports of the circumstances which seem to have taken place in connection with Mr. Stanley's explorations, and which have created such a painful impression in the country." Mr. Stanley not being a British subject, her Majesty's Government have no authority over him; but "his lordship cannot but hope, looking to the character which Mr. Stanley has won in this country by his expedition in search of Dr. Livingstone, that he may eventually be able to afford some explanation or justification of his proceedings which is not apparent from the reports which have been as yet received." As regards this charitable hope of the Foreign Secretary, the only comment which suggests itself is that Mr. Stanley has up to the present been the reporter of his own proceedings; and if he is to be judged out of his own mouth, the appearance of any subsequent explanation or justification of his proceedings is in the last degree improbable, and that for the simple reason that he obviously sees nothing in them which requires to be explained or justified. Considering, however, the manner in which his doings are regarded in this country, it is as well that Mr. Stanley's audacious assumption of an English mission should be at once put a stop to, and we are glad to learn that "Lord Derby will cause her Majesty's Consuls on the East Coast of Africa to be instructed to intimate to him, if any means of communicating with him should be open to them, that he has no authority to hoist the English flag."

A BOY KILLS HIS FATHER.

The Austin (Nev.) Reveille, of Oct. 30, says: "A very sad incident occurred in this city Saturday night. It seems that William Argall entered his house in Upper Austin slightly intoxicated and commenced an assault on his wife in presence of his son John, who was at the time trimming his nails with a pocket-knife. The old man attempted to strike his wife with a bottle, when the boy jumped up and stepped between them. The mother immediately left the house uninjured. The father assaulted the boy with the bottle, which he threw at him, but missed his mark, and the bottle was broken into atoms on the wall. The father then grabbed the son by the throat, and in the scuffle received a cut from the pocket-knife in the son's hands. Drs. Wixom and Huntsman were called, and did everything they could to save the wounded man's life, but to no purpose. He died this morning at about ten o'clock. The general verdict seems to be undoubtedly in favor of the boy, John Argall, and we understand that even the deceased said to those around him that his son did not cut him intentionally, but that it was purely accidental. The Argall family are well known and highly respected. The three elder sons, with their father, have always enjoyed the reputation of being industrious and expert miners, and of late years have been in the constant employment of the Manhattan Company. William Argall was a man of great physical power, and enjoyed a well-earned reputation for courage and daring in underground mining operations. The deceased was a native of Cornwall, England, aged about fifty years."

A TEST OF RAPID PENMANSHIP.

The Toronto Mail says: "One day last week Mr. D. H. Fletcher, of the office of Blake, Kerr & Boyd, made a bet of $10 with a friend that he could write 5,000 words in eight hours. According to the terms of the wager there were not to be two words alike in the entire 5,000, and it was agreed that if Mr. Fletcher succeeded in writing 3,000 words within the time settled upon, he would win the bet in so far that he would not lose the $10 he had put up; failing to write the 3,000 words, it was to be held that he had lost. The bet was taken up, and Mr. Fletcher commenced his work at 10 o'clock one morning. He wrote on foolscap paper, 144 words to the page. Having written till a little after 5 o'clock, which included an hour's relaxation, making about seven hours' work, he found he had written 3,500 words. It was unnecessary to go any further, as it was impossible to write the remaining 1,500 in an hour. Mr. Fletcher won one part of the bet and saved his $10."

GOSSIP FROM THE METROPOLIS.

THE EFFECT OF THE EASTERN COMPLICATIONS—THE ARCTIC EXPEDITION—THE GENTLEMEN OF THE LIFE GUARDS—A MILITARY LEADER WANTED FOR THE ARMY—THE LORD MAYOR'S DINNER TO THE THEATRICAL PROFESSION.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 28, 1876.

All week the weather has been cold, dark, and dismal. Fogs have prevailed, and more than once gas has had to be lighted during the day. This atmospheric murkiness is appropriate to the time. We are all in the dark as to the great crisis abroad, and everybody has a gloomy look. People in business are getting sick at heart at the utter stagnation which prevails, and the monotonous suspense in which everything hangs is in itself very depressing. After the panic of last week, there has been an interval of comparative quiet and languor. There is in some quarters a faint revival of hope that peace may somehow be established, but the impression rests rather on the absence of news than on anything definite or authentic. So far as I can judge, those who have the most thorough and intimate knowledge of the subject are disposed to think that the present lull does not mean peace, but is only a prelude to the storm. There seems to be reason to believe that Russia finds the game more in her hands than she supposed, and doubts whether she will ever again have as good a chance of playing her cards. At present she has all the advantage of working behind a disguised position, and being able to push on preparations for hostilities, while other powers are for the moment paralyzed by uncertainty. Thoughtful people here see very clearly that, whatever may be the adjustment of the armistice question, there are other matters in the background which will be the real field of battle, and that the peril is only briefly postponed. Meanwhile the English Government is not idle. The dock-yards and arsenals are very busy, and the naval force now available is undoubtedly very strong. There is already a formidable fleet in Besika Bay, and reinforcements are being got ready which will add greatly to its strength.

The public mind is so low already that there is hardly likely to be any room for a further fall of spirits on account of the disappointing announcement that the Arctic Expedition has been given up as hopeless, and that the North Pole is, as Capt. Nares says, "impracticable." Indeed, people are rather disposed to console themselves with the reflection that, even though the Pole remains a mystery, the gallant crews are safe. They appear to have gone through the most severe trials which intense cold can inflict on the human frame, the temperature being for a time down to 70° below zero, and the extreme lowest temperature touched 104° below freezing point. They also suffered from the want of fresh meat, and have, since their arrival, shown a keen appetite for mutton chops. It is, however, needless to repeat particulars, which will have been telegraphed. It seems to be assumed here that for the present at any rate this result of the expedition will put an end to any further researches. The opinion of the crew of the Alert seems to be unanimous and decided that they reached the limit of practicable navigation, and that the North Pole is unapproachable. It is, however, not likely that this conclusion will be universally accepted, and that the world will be content to leave the Pole alone in its mysterious isolation. The conclusion that beyond the point reached by the expedition there is an impregnable circle of ice fortifications is, of course, though possibly, and even probably, true, not a proved fact, but only a speculation. At the same time the expedition is entitled to the credit of having got nearer to the Pole than anybody else.

The death of the old Marquis of Tweeddale, the companion in arms of the Duke of Wellington, and the father of the present Duchess, has opened up some curious questions of military promotion. The Marquis was a Field Marshal, and also Gold Stick in Waiting at Court. The duty of the latter office is to attend the sovereign on state occasions, and he is supposed to take the parole and countersign verbally from the royal lips. Originally the Gold Stick was the chief in command of the two troops of Horse Guards who attended the sovereign, and were responsible for the safety of that personage. The privates in this regiment were all gentlemen by birth, but toward the end of the last century it was found to be rather a difficult body to manage, and was abolished, the two present regiments of Life Guards being substituted for it, and after the Peninsular wars the Blues were added to the Royal Body Guard. The officers are still of a very aristocratic stamp, but the men of the regiment are recruited on account of their appearance and stature, but not of their good birth. They are still, however, addressed on duty as "Gentlemen of the Life Guard." Down to the reign of William IV. the household troops were under the command of the Gold Stick—which office was filled by the Colonel of the corps in town—but they were then brought under the control of the Commander in Chief, instead of being exclusively in relation to the sovereign. This, of course, reduced the Gold Stick to be a mere court official, and so he has remained. It is probable that the post will now be bestowed on Lord Strathnairn, one of the veterans of the service, but there are other candidates, and it is also said that some changes may be made in the conditions of the office. The Field Marshalship left vacant by the Marquis' death is also a subject of keen contention. The number of Field Marshals is now very limited, and the office is never given except as a sort of compliment to Generals whose chief distinction is their old age. At the present moment there are only three Field Marshals, the Duke of Cambridge, Sir John F. Fitzgerald, an octogenarian, and the Prince of Wales. The Duke is Commander in Chief of the Army, and it seems to be settled that in the event of war he will adhere to his administrative duties, and not take the field. Indeed, he has neither the nerve nor the capacity to lead an army in active service, though a very good official at home. Sir J. Fitzgerald is too old for work, and the Prince of Wales is, of course, only a fancy soldier. Practically, therefore, the rank of Field Marshal has become only a nominal one, and a mark of distinction, with no duties and no salary attached to it. It has for some time been a purely honorary rank, as is the case with some other military posts. For instance, the Duke of Cambridge serves gratuitously as Field-Marshal, Colonel of the Seventeenth Lancers, the Royal Artillery and Engineers, and Sixtieth Rifles, and receives pay only as Commander in Chief and Colonel of the Grenadier Guards. The Prince of Wales is also Field Marshal and Colonel of the Tenth Hussars and Rifle Brigade, but is paid only as Colonel of Hussars. It is thought probable that the number of Field Marshals will not at present be increased. Possibly the design is to keep the rank for the Duke of Connaught; (Prince Arthur,) who seems to be already designated as successor to his cousin as Commander in Chief, though I should think, when the time comes, doubts as to the expediency of this appointment will arise. The question is also hotly argued at present, who is to be at the head of the Army if the country goes to war? Lord Napier of Magdela who is now conveniently at Gibraltar, has been named, but there seems to be a strong prejudice against him as slow and devoted to engineering tactics. Lord Strathnairn and Sir J. Codrington have seen their best days, and though there may be no lack of possible men, there are none who have actually proved their capacity for such a post.

Mr. Cotton, the Lord Mayor of London, whose term of office expires on the 9th of November, has sought distinction during his Mayoralty by giving dinners to different sets of people supposed to be the representatives of the chief public professions. He has feasted the clergy, the judges and lawyers, the doctors, the Stock Exchange and financial people, men of letters, and last not least, the actors and actresses of London. The banquet to the last named took place on Tuesday at 2 o'clock, in order to allow the guests to keep their public engagements in the evening. There was, as might be expected, a motley group, and it is understood that a good deal of jealousy and heart-burning has been caused by the distribution of invitations. There can be no doubt that, as a rule, the theatrical profession is much more respectable and respected than it used to be, and that many members of it are freely received in good society, not only on the ordinary terms, but often with especial attention. At the same time, it is notoriously a very mixed body, and it is difficult to separate the chaff from the wheat. On such an occasion there was naturally a good deal of oratorical extravagance. Actors are usually uneasy when they have to speak for themselves, and indulge in strained and artificial language. It was, in fact, quite a chorus of mutual admiration. The Lord Mayor said that the English stage, at present, was the most perfect in the world; Mr. Buckstone pointed to the long run of Byron's "Our Boys" as a proof that Shakespeare and Sheridan had worthy successors; Mr. Bancroft brought in his wife (Marie Wilton) as the ideal of modern comedy; Mr. Wills, the dramatic author, argued in favor of a national theatre, supported by the State; and Mr. Phelps, in the only sensible speech that was made, recalled the success which had attended his own efforts to popularize Shakespeare, and urged the advantage to the community of continuing the movement. There were critics, as well as actors, present, and the affectionate accord between the two classes was very touching. J. H. F.

LERDO DE TEJADA'S ELECTION AFFIRMED BY CONGRESS—THE SUPREME COURT MAJORITY FAVORING THE MOVE—A ROSEATE VIEW OF THE NEW EXECUTIVE.

HAVANA, Nov. 7.—The steamer Cuba arrived from Vera Cruz this forenoon, and brings the following advices:

CITY OF MEXICO, Oct. 29.—Congress having passed the laws regarding the press and extraordinary powers of the President, the House of Deputies constituted itself an Electoral College and declared the re-election of Lerdo de Tejada by a vote of 131 against 45. On the 26th, Justice Iglesias addressed a communication to the court declaring his conviction that there was no legal election, and requesting the court to protest against the action of the Electoral College. He further proposed that the court dissolve as a constitutional body. His first proposition was voted down, 6 to 5. The second was voted down, 7 to 4. On the 28th, two new Judges of the Supreme Court were installed, who are in accord with the majority. Iglesias has obtained leave of absence for one month. He is broken down forever as a public man, and the Decimbristas are crushed out.

Lerdo de Tejada has weathered a tremendous storm, and has shown himself to be a man of great ability. He has the support of all the Governors, excepting at Oaxaca. Pronunciados are throwing down their arms in various directions. Their resources are all exhausted, and a final collapse is expected. Oaxaca still gives trouble, but Gen. Diaz and his followers are compelled to keep in the mountains, and are afraid to meet the Government troops.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

A QUIET DAY—IMMIGRATION STATISTICS—NEW LIGHT AT SEA—RANCHO PATENTS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—There is very little business transacted in the departments to-day, nearly all of the chief officials and a large proportion of the clerks being absent in their respective States for the purpose of voting. Deep interest is manifested throughout the city concerning the Presidential election. Crowds are gathered around the telegraph and newspaper offices, awaiting news indicative in any measure of the result in doubtful States. There is, however, very little betting.

Official information received at the Bureau of Statistics shows that during the month of October, 1876, there arrived at the port of New-York 6,550 immigrants, of whom 3,628 were males and 2,922 females. THE FLOODS IN CUBA.

SOURCE OF THE RISING—FORTY MILES OF LAND UNDER WATER—EXTENT OF THE DAMAGE TO THE CROPS.

HAVANA, Nov. 7.—The accounts which have been received from the interior show that the main source of the recent floods was the Laguna del Pesoro, which is situated on the north side of Zapata swamp. The floods ran in a straight line north, through the centre of Colon County, seeking to unite with the swamp of Bibana, on the north coast. The overflow, swelled by the rivers Palmillas, San Anton, Guayabo, and others, ran through the following counties: Roque, Sabanilla, Recero, San Anton, Camila, Guanajayabo, and Palmillas. At a plantation called Fermina, where the main trunk of the railroad has a tunnel, eight feet of water remained on the ground five days after the hurricane. The low-lying lands were overrun to the height of the house-tops, and on the plantations only the chimneys were to be seen above the water. The inundation covers an area of about forty miles. The following plantations suffered the most severely: Fermino, Ferver, Armonia, Carambola, Duenas, and Rita. From fifteen to twenty others were totally ruined. Over fifty smaller farms were also destroyed.

The exact cause of the flood is unknown, but it is supposed to have been occasioned by the heavy rains; some people believe that springs came out of the earth. In some sections the damage done by the flood was much heavier than that done by the hurricane. Exact estimates cannot yet be made, but it is supposed the sugar crop has suffered by both calamities. From fifteen to twenty per cent. of the crop will nevertheless be about as last year's, because it promised to be exceptionally large.

The tobacco crop will be retarded because the seedlings were destroyed, but they can be replaced in most cases.

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S TROUBLES.

THE SALE OF HIS EFFECTS TO PAY ANN ELIZA'S ALIMONY.

From the Salt Lake Herald, Nov. 2.

Yesterday morning the special Commissioner, Dr. A. K. Smith, sold the property of President B. Young, recently levied upon to make Ann Eliza's alimony pendente lite. The sale took place in front of Mulloy's stable. Mr. Fred Carter acting as crier. A large crowd gathered to witness it, but there were few bidders, people evidently being afraid of buying a lawsuit. Previous to the sale, Mr. James Jack, acting as agent for President Young, warned the public against buying the property, as the defendant in the divorce case [Young] proposed to commence suit for the recovery of the articles seized and sold by the Commissioner. The property was knocked down as follows: Large close carriage, $375, to James A. Fitzgerald; Kimball carriage, $125, Patrick Lannan; victorine, $200, S. Bamberger; Studebaker carriage, $52 50, J. M. Allen; lumber wagon, $25, S. Bamberger; wagon, $27 50, J. E. Tyler; wagon, $25, S. Bamberger; span of mules, $125, R. P. Lounsbery; Concord harness, $25, R. P. Lounsbery; span of horses, $130, J. M. Miller; cow, $20, James Showell; cow, $25, George H. Cannon; cow, $20, —— McIntyre. The total sum obtained was $1,175—not over a fourth of the actual value of the property.

Under the order to the special Commissioner to sequester and sell property until the alimony award is made, we understand he proposes to make a further levy on defendant's goods, and proceed to sell as in this case.

The defendant's agents, after the sale yesterday, made a formal demand on the purchasers for the release of the property, and subsequently suits of replevin were commenced in the District Court for the recovery of the goods. Chief Justice Schaeffer instructed the Clerk of the court not to issue summonses in the suits, but it is probable that the Judge's action was the result of a misunderstanding, as he would scarcely assume to prohibit a party from bringing suit in such a case. There can be little doubt that the summonses will be issued to-day, and the subsequent disposition of the suits will be a matter for consideration when they get before his Honor in the ordinary manner.

There is a diversity of opinion as to the legality of the sale. Many excellent attorneys say that it "won't hold water;" that the Commissioner can give no good title to the property. However, as all that has been disposed of is of a perishable nature, its value to defendant will be lost unless he regains early possession of it; hence the sale may be illegal, and the result still prove disastrous to the defendant. If this generation cannot untangle and straighten out the vexed Ann Eliza question, probably the next may, so the country is not left without hope.

LUNCH ON RECEPTION DAYS.

The Countess de Bassonville has published a book entitled the Almanach du Savoir-Vivre. According to this work, the mysteries of dinner are simple by comparison with the rules imposed upon one who is rash enough to entertain a shooting party in the country. A cold breakfast must be provided for the guests at about 7 o clock in the morning; it will consist of ham, some rôti used the day before, Bordeaux wine, and tea and coffee. There will be no ceremony observed; every guest will take what he likes, and some will sit while others stand. This breakfast, it seems, supports the sportsmen till supper time, when they will be fed with good and nourishing meat, accompanied with excellent Burgundy or Bordeaux. But they must have no champagne. Nor will any coffee be allowed when supper is over; its place will be taken by a box of good cigars and a bowl of excellent punch. Further on the disciple learns that of late fashionable women in Paris have taken to lunch, not after the gormandizing fashion of English women, but after the French manner which makes of it "une élégance nouvelle." At the best houses one finds on reception days the salon garnished with such things as galantine with truffles, lobster mayonnaise, sandwiches of foie gras, and every conceivable kind of "chatterie" in the way of eating; things which, no doubt, are ethereal compared to the gross food affected by English women at lunch. It is interesting to learn that a petite soirée, as opposed to a ball, should be ended by the production of punch and chocolate, which are all the better if they are made in the morning and warmed up at night, and that to them one should add "quelques potages et bouillons pour les personnes qui craignent les spiritueux."

RHEUMATIC INFANTS.

The Washington Chronicle of Monday says: "Rheumatism is an ailment that generally confines itself to persons of mature age, but it seems that lately in this city it has taken hold of some exceedingly young children. Two of the little ones of Mr. James A. McDevitt, aged respectively four and seven years, are now suffering from an attack which the family physician pronounces to be unmistakably rheumatism. The children exhibit the same symptoms and experience, the same pains which older people show and complain of when they are suffering from the disease mentioned above. The doctor is positive that the pains are not caused by rapid growth, but, strange as it may seem, are the result of genuine rheumatism. We have heard of several similar cases in other families, but these are the best authenticated."

HAIR SACRIFICED.

The Reading (Pa.,) Eagle says: "Two young girls of this city lately came home from Philadelphia shorn of their wealth of raven tresses. After they had taken in all the points at the big show and had made many purchases, before they knew it they had spent all their money, and what was worse, had lost their return excursion tickets. They had no friends in Philadelphia, and no time to write to Reading. They therefore resolved to make a raise; so they skipped away into a barber shop and struck a bargain for their back hair. The shaver offered $3 75 each for what they had. In a short time they were nicely shorn, and thus they were able to get back to their native land."

RAISING TURNIPS.

The Providence Journal tells this story of annoyance to a Rhode Islander: "One of our citizens, living at the north end, who had a flourishing turnip-patch from which he was enjoying much gratification in anticipation, was very much surprised and decidedly vexed, a few days since, when he set out to gather his esculents, to find that, although the tops were apparently all right, many of the roots were gone; in short, that an enemy had been there and pulled up about half the turnips, carefully and artistically replanting the tops, so that the yard had presented its usual appearance."

GENERAL MISCELLANY.

ABUSE OF THE FRENCH ARMY.

GUILTY JOURNALS TO BE PROSECUTED—INTEMPERATE CONDUCT ON THE PART OF THE RADICALS.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

The Minister of Justice has just issued a circular directing the law authorities of the Republic to prosecute all journals guilty of abusing the Army. At Nancy, Perpignan, and Montpellier, officers have recently been insulted; nor is this to be wondered at, seeing the tone of the Radical press, which calls them "soldiers of the Pope," "pasteboard heroes," "executioners," "brilliant capitulationists," and so on. Ministers evidently consider it high time to put a stop to such language, which encourages insubordination. One paper addresses language like this to the commander of the Eighth Army Corps: "Gen. Ducrot, you ought to be sober of words. Experience should have taught you that one may escape Prussian bullets to fall covered with ridicule." A Marseilles journal tells Gen. Espivent, who commands the Fifteenth Army Corps, that in the military salute the thumb has a very little distance to go to come in contact with the nose. Another paper is very hard upon the commander of the Fourteenth Army Corps, writing: "Gen. Bourbaki, no one can equal you in getting out of a besieged place to go and conspire abroad, to return and lose an army in the snow, and then to shoot yourself with a pistol, so as to be quite as well to-day as 'Die-or-Conquer' Ducrot." Another paper ventures on a comparison between the new War Minister and the low comedian Gil Perez, and a fifth sings the praises of St. Just and the Convention, and demands that the Generals named above and others be brought to trial. As for the journal edited by M. Henri Rochefort from Geneva, its publisher is to appear before the Court of Correctional Police on the 27th inst. on a charge of having abused Gens. Ducrot, Douai, Bourbaki, and Fénélon in an article entitled "Gloire aux Vaincus." It may be added that a municipality in one of the suburbs of Paris has just changed the name of a street from Rue Canrobert to Rue Union. This intemperate conduct on the part of the Radicals, if carried much further, will certainly alarm the 'indifferent.' The Temps a couple of days ago made an eloquent appeal to its friends in favor of the new War Minister, who is being made a target of, and hopes that no attack will be made upon him in the Chambers. It would be wrong to suppose, however, that the Ultras have not some cause to complain about Gen. Berthaut reappointing all the commanders of the Army Corps, none of whom like the Republic. When Louis Philippe succeeded Charles X., the War Minister removed sixty-five out of seventy-five Generals of division; thirty-nine regiments of infantry and twenty-six of cavalry received new Colonels, and the commandants of thirty-one fortified places were changed. In addition, seventy-six out of eighty-six Prefects were dismissed, and similar changes made in every branch of the Administration; and nearly all the Ambassadors and Ministers were removed. This was the way in which the young branch dealt with the friends or servants of the elder branch.

NEWFOUNDLAND COD.

HOW THE FISH ARE CURED AND SHIPPED.

A recent letter from St. Johns, N. F., to the Montreal Gazette says: "We are now busy shipping our dried codfish for foreign markets. It is curious to note the history of a codfish from the moment when, on the hook of the fisherman, is is dragged from its native element till it disappears down the human throat on the banks of the Amazon, the Parana, the Tagus, or the Po. After a few expiring wriggles—and it is a comfort to be informed by naturalists that fish are almost insensible to pain—the cod is flung from the fisherman's boat upon the rough 'stage,' where it is received by the 'cut-throat,' who with a sharp knife lays open the fish across the throat and down the belly, and passes it to the 'header.' This operator proceeds to extract the liver, which is dropped into a vessel by his side, to be converted into cod liver oil. He then extracts the entrails and wrenches off the head, and throws these into another receptacle, to be preserved for the farmer, to mix with bog and earth, thus forming a most fertilizing compost for his fields. The tongues, however, are taken out, and also the 'sounds,' and these, fresh or pickled, are an excellent article of food. The fish is then passed to the 'splitter,' who by a dexterous movement cuts out the back-bone nearly to the tail, and thus lays the fish entirely open, and capable of being laid flat on its back. This is the nicest part of the operation, and the 'splitter' always commands higher wages than the other operators. The 'salter' next takes the fish and washes it well from all particle of blood, salts it, and places it in piles to drain. After lying the proper length of time it is washed and spread to dry on the 'flake,' which is formed of spruce boughs, supported by a frame-work, resting on upright poles. Here the cod are spread out individually to bleach by exposure to sun and air, and during this process require constant attention. At night, or on the approach of rain, they are made up into little round heaps, with the skin outward, in which state they look very much like small haycocks. When the 'bloom,' or whitish appearance, which for a time they assume, comes out on the dried fish, the process is finished, and they are then quite ready for storing. On being conveyed to the premises of the exporting merchant, they are first 'culled,' or assorted, into four different kinds, known as 'Merchantable,' 'Madeira,' 'West India,' and 'Dun,' or broken fish. The first is the best quality; the second a grade lower; the third is intended for the stomach of negroes, and the fourth, which is incapable of keeping, is used at home. The cod sent to hot countries is packed by screw power into small casks called 'drums;' that which goes to the Mediterranean is usually exported in bulk. We ship large quantities of dried codfish to Brazil, and there is hardly an inhabited corner of that vast empire where the Newfoundland cod is not to be found, being carried on the backs of mules from the sea-coast into the most distant provinces of the interior. The negroes of the West Indies welcome it as a grateful addition to their vegetable diet. To all parts of the Mediterranean it finds its way—Italians, Greeks, and Sicilians equally relishing the produce of our sea harvest. The Spaniards and Portuguese are our best customers, and all over the sunny Peninsula, the 'bacalo' have been a standing dish since the days of Cervantes, who makes special mention of our cod in Don Quixote under that name. In Great Britain and the United States we have thousands of customers. In the warmer regions of the earth, however, the people seem to have a special liking for the dried and salted cod, and to them it is an almost indispensable article of food. The more extensively Brazil, Spain, and Italy are opened up by railways and other means of transit, the greater becomes the demand for cod, as the cost is lessened. Roman Catholic countries are our best customers, and Newfoundlanders have no reason to wish for the abolition of Lent or a reduction in the number of fast days appointed by the Roman Catholic Church. The advancing price of fresh meats of all kinds in various countries is also rapidly increasing the demand for cod, and has considerably enhanced its value. Twelve or fourteen years ago the average price of fish was from twelve to fifteen shillings per quintal. It is now exactly double that price."

SEVEN ACRES OF LAND FOR EACH PERSON.

From the Athenæum.

There is commonly at every Social Science Congress one address which stands out most prominently, not always or necessarily on account of its inherent value, though sometimes also for that, but also on account of its novel, or unusually suggestive, or, as it is called, "sensational" character. Such was Dr. Richardson's address at Brighton last year, when that very desirable place of residence, the City of Hygeia, was first introduced to the notice of the British public; such was Mr. Hawksley's address this year at Liverpool. Mr. Hawksley has a gloomy tale to tell of our condition and prospects at the present day, and he tells it without reserve. First of all let us realize these facts and figures: "The population of England now amounts to 24,000,000 persons, distributed over about thirty million acres of cultivable land. There is, therefore, one person to one and a quarter acres, whereas in most of the other kingdoms of Europe there are about five acres of land to each person; and on the entire surface of the earth, exclusive of the artic zones, about ten acres of land to each person; or, after a fair deduction for uninhabitable deserts and mountains, probably seven or eight acres of cultivable land to each person."

OVER ONE MILLION MILCH COWS.

From the London Echo, Oct. 25.

In the dairy show opened yesterday at the Agricultural Hall, a novel and interesting addition is made to the agricultural exhibitions periodically claiming metropolitan attention. The dairy farmers constitute an important section of the community, the returns of last year showing that in England alone there were 1,600,000 milch cows, of which number it was calculated 1,200,000 were in the hands of 50,000 persons. The value of the milk produced by these cows, putting the price at sixpence per imperial gallon, and estimating that each cow yields four hundred gallons a year, would amount to twelve millions sterling. With the facilities afforded by the railways and the operation of the Adulteration act, the milk trade is rapidly increasing, so that there is as much excuse for an annual exhibition of dairy produce as of horses, poultry, dogs, cats, bar-maids, donkeys or babies. If the Dairy Show leads to the vending of pure milk and the total annihilation of "Simpson," "calves' brains," "the cow with the iron tail," and other adulterants, until recently said to form component elements of "London milk," the British Dairy Farmers' Association will not have lived in vain.

A DANGEROUS PLAYTHING.

On Wednesday a little son of Mrs. James Hodge, residing in Auburn, Me., found a pretty little copper cylinder, which he concluded to use as a head to his lead pencil. He showed it to his mother and solicited her aid in the job of making it ready. Mrs. Hodge took up the little copper cylinder, and, with a pair of scissors, began to punch a hole into it with a view of digging out some substance which appeared to be within. She had not been long engaged in this work when it exploded with a tremendous concussion, and blew off Mrs. Hodge's forefinger and part of the thumb of her left hand. The lad was hit in the face and slightly wounded. It was a dynamite cartridge.

GERMANY CHALLENGED BY FRANCE.

THE PARIS EXPOSITION OF 1878—THE TIME AND PLACE UNFAVORABLE FOR GERMANY.

From the London Telegraph.

France has challenged Germany to another contest, and her old enemy hesitates to "take up the glove." This is apparently the meaning of an article by Dr. Julius Lessing, who, as Director of the Royal Industrial Museum at Berlin, and a writer on art—in fact, a kind of German Sir Henry Cole—expresses great objection to the proposed Paris Exhibition of 1878. Lately another German critic declared that the exhibition of national art and industry in Philadelphia was discreditably poor in conception, quality, and execution; and Dr. Lessing's protests are probably based on the fear of another fiasco in a more conspicuous position, and in the face of sarcastic foes. At the outset he denounces the project as a party device, saying: "In very well-informed circles the opinion prevails that the main purpose is to give MacMahon's seven years' Presidency, which will then be near its close, a new prestige, to show the still refractory Parisian that the Republic as well as the Empire is able to lure to Paris the pleasant, gold-bringing stream of visitors, and that the material splendor and prosperity of the city can be maintained under the present régime also. But what is that to us?" Dr. Lessing refuses to admit that Germany has gone back in industry and art: "It would be a sort of desertion of the flag to maintain that Germany cannot exhibit. She can; but by what means can success be secured? Only by energetic high pressure on the part of Government, and by a still more energetic expenditure of money." But his oddest argument is that the time chosen for the Exhibition is unfavorable for Germany. "While France," he says, "owing to circumstances of which I cannot judge, is enjoying material prosperity, the depression of industry here is a well-known fact. The 'speculation period' did infinite harm; the demoralization of workmen can only gradually be counteracted. The heavy decrease of income among people of the wealthier classes brings with it the want—than which none is more keenly felt—the want of orderers and buyers, so that Germany has no reason to choose this particular time to retrieve former defeats." In addition, Germany is not prepared, and the notice is too short: "It would be simply impossible to get anything ready in this time that could indicate a real returning back from the false path into which German industry has struck." Then comes an attack on Parisian art as a bad model, and a denunciation of "the terrorism exercised by France." "Why not resolve to say 'No,'" the writer asks, "at the risk of exciting the displeasure of that nation?"

* * * * * * *

But we constantly see signs in Germany that popular rights and reasonable liberty of the press are hardly as yet secured, and the mighty Empire is one day engaged in persecuting almost to death an erring public servant, while on the next it sends to jail a remonstrant editor or recalcitrant priest. Then the Socialists, once too contemptible in politics to be reckoned with, are mustering their forces for the elections, and will, it is believed, greatly increase their strength. These defects will disappear, no doubt, in time, but they are the natural outcome of a Constitution that did not grow, but was cut out by that rather clumsy implement the sword. The drill-master is still in the ascendant; an Emperor who is nothing but a soldier, and a Premier who likes to be considered a dragoon, are still the leading men. They invented new Germany in a barrack, and will probably keep her there as long as they live. No wonder that, invited to a Parisian festival, Arminius discovers some deficiencies in his own gait, clothes, manners, furniture, art objects, gloves, neckties, and boots. He would be more at home in a new battle-field, and is strongly disposed to decline the polite invitation to a contest of peace.

A SERVIAN SOLDIER'S FUNERAL.

The correspondent of the London News, with the head-quarters of the Servian Army, writes: "In one of my telegrams I have mentioned shortly the solemn requiem mass for the souls of the slain in the recent fighting performed here on Oct. 8, in accordance with the rites of the Greek Church. The ceremony was in itself interesting and imposing, and was followed by the presentation of medals for valor to a number of soldiers who had been more fortunate in the fighting than the poor fellows who did not live to receive the reward for valiant conduct. The new church stands on the parade ground on the opposite side of the road from the head-quarters house. Although a pretty, it is not a very solid structure, for its outer walls consist of green canvas stretched over a framework, and the interior is lined with green silk. It may, indeed, be called rather an ecclesiastical marquee than a church. A brigade of selected battalions, which had been engaged in the fighting, paraded at 8:30 o'clock, and was formed into a hollow square, having the green church in its centre. Outside these troops, each battalion of which represented a nationality, one being composed of Servians, one of Russians, one of Bulgarians, and one of Montenegrins, there crowded in irregular masses the whole of the troops quartered in the Deligrad lines. These were not on parade, and were present voluntarily to witness the spectacle. When the ceremony in the church began, the altar stood in the doorway, whence the curtains were looped back, while priests stood about it waving censers. Presently it was borne inside, and just as this was done, a clamor of cheering announced the approach of the General. There was an incongruity between the solemn dirge-like roll of the priests' chant inside the church, and the noisy burst of glad cheering outside, but when men die fast, as in a campaign, and when men get used to carrying their lives in their hands, such incongruities are inevitable, and do not shock as they would do in other circumstances. Tchernayeff, followed by his staff, entered the square, passed along its four faces, shook hands with the officers, and then entered the church. While the ceremony there went on he stood all alone, in the shadow, and a sunbeam fell upon a Red Cross girl in light blue—the only woman in the place—who stood between him and his staff. It would not interest the reader to detail the prolonged and involved ceremony inside the church; but when that was finished there was yet another to follow. Again the altar was brought to the doorway; but this time it was carried further—right out into the open air. By it stood the two officiating priests in black velvet robes slashed with silver; behind the altar waved the broad folds of the beautiful banner presented by the ladies of Russia to the Army of the Morava, its staff upborn by a stalwart Russian veteran soldier, across whose breast, right from shoulder to shoulder, stretched a row of medals; behind him again a choir of Russian soldiers, the sweetness of whose voices contrasted curiously with their grim and martial aspect, and the medals of many wars decorating their broad breasts. In front of the altar stood the General and his staff; then there was the hollow square of armed men, and outside everything many thousands of bareheaded reverent soldiers. The open-air service—it was the requiem, as I understand, the mass having been celebrated inside the church—was a full choral one; everything was chanted, and when in parts the chant was taken up by the multitude standing around, the effect was one not to be forgotten in a lifetime."

A BURGLAR SHOT DEAD.

The Indianapolis Journal of Monday says: "Last Friday night, Mr. Joseph B. Pitzer, of Zionsville, Boone County, with his trusty shot-gun diminished the number of burglars infesting this city and neighborhood by one, and this a 'boss' in his peculiar line of trade. At a late hour that night Mr. Pitzer was awakened by a noise in the rear of his residence, which proved to be made by burglars climbing upon the kitchen. They removed the upper sash of the gable window opening out upon the roof of the kitchen, and through the window gained access to the main building. They passed from the room first entered down the stairway into the hall and parlor. Mr. Pitzer hurriedly dressed himself, and arming himself with his shot-gun, proceeded to reconnoiter. He took the precaution to add to the load of birdshot in the gun a few buckshot, as the game he was after was large. He then went to a side door on the east side of the house where he could command a view of the kitchen and the probable way of exit of the burglars. He passed out of this door to a small porch, and as he stepped from the porch a man advanced cautiously toward him, stooping as if to conceal himself, evidently not being aware of Mr. Pitzer's presence. He soon discovered Mr. Pitzer, however, and started up, and as Mr. Pitzer thought, attempted to draw a pistol. Mr. Pitzer immediately fired upon him with, as it afterward proved, fatal effect. The man disappeared behind the house and Mr. Pitzer returned to his room and remained on guard until daylight. After breakfast he started for the barn to feed his horse, and in the barn-yard found the dead body of the man. The shot had taken effect in the breast and neck. The news soon spread through the village, and an excited crowd gathered about the place. The acting Coroner, Mr. R. Baird, summoned a jury and held an inquest. The verdict of the jury was that the deceased came to his death by a gunshot wound by the hands of Joseph B. Pitzer, while the said man was in the attempt to feloniously rob the house of Pitzer. No one in Zionsville recognized the dead burglar, but he is said to be Charley Brown, a professional of this city, well known to the police. Of course, there was no arrest for the shooting. Mr. Pitzer is a well-known and well-to-do citizen of Boone County, and it is possible the burglars, knowing his circumstances, believed he had a considerable sum of money in the house. At all events, they made the visit meaning business.

IDLE TREASURE.

The Washington Chronicle of Monday has this statement: "When Ottman was arrested on the charge of being connected with the Treasury robbery, his capture was almost immediately followed by the recovery of the sum of $14,500, which he had deposited in Alexandria. This morning, together with other valuables, the supposed proceeds of the robbery referred to was lodged with the Property Clerk of the Chief of Police Office, in whose possession it has remained ever since. As the conviction of Ottman seems to be a very hazy affair at the present writing, or a settlement of the question in any shape doubtful, it suggests the idea that this snug little sum must lie and rust for a long while to come. When it is considered that a recent newspaper paragraph, so the real estate brokers assert, locked up over $200,000 worth of capital in this city, it is hard, indeed, that this sum should also lie idle."

THE IRISH VICEROYALTY.

A TRAVESTY OF THE COURT OF ST. JAMES—THE LORD LIEUTENANT'S HOSPITALITIES—A PASSION FOR INTRIGUE—THE "CASTLE" AND AMBITIOUS ALDERMEN—IRELAND ACKNOWLEDGED AS A DIFFERENT NATION.

From the Economist, Oct 21.

The Viceroyalty of Ireland may be said to have all the vices that are commonly attributed to monarchical institutions by Republican writers, and it fulfills none of the real political functions which a real monarchy more or less successfully fulfills. It will not be denied by any one that court life is corrupting in many ways, that it encourages idleness, profusion and intrigue, that it sets up false standards of merit, and that it often thwarts statesmanship by the force of personal caprice or private interests. * * *

But the Viceroyalty is as costly as it is useless. It involves a large annual expenditure on altogether purposeless pomp; an army of officials follows in the train of the Lord Lieutenant, and throngs all the avenues to the Castle, and this body of drones is not kept up for nothing. If, however, the cost were the only point to be considered, it might be a long time before the Viceroyalty would have rigorous justice meted out to it, for there are large classes of persons in Ireland to whom "the Castle" is a very profitable institution. The Dublin tradespeople, no doubt, would be as indignant at the cessation of the Lord Lieutenant's balls and levees as the West End shopkeepers of London were when the Queen retired into privacy some years ago. And in Dublin, "the Castle" is almost the only thing that keeps society of the expensive sort moving. The professional and mercantile classes, again, find in the Lord Lieutenant's hospitalities a substitute for social delights of a higher kind; Queen's Counsel and Fellows of Trinity College, Deputy Lieutenants and Aldermen would think themselves reduced to a dismal provincialism if they could not appear with their wives and daughters at the Castle. But this craving for a contact with sham royalty is demoralizing, and its evil influences may be traced in the amazing pretentiousness and hollowness of Dublin society. Moreover, it lends itself to a passion for intrigue that has done much to degrade and injure Ireland. Not only is the patronage of every successive Viceroy fought for by a hungry crowd of place-hunters from the unnecessary posts of the Viceregal house, hold up to the excessively numerous appointments of the Irish Bar and Bench, but there is a constant struggle to enlist, or seem to enlist, personal influences in favor of each competitor. The ambitious man must be assiduous. At court he must appear to have the favor of great people, and by this means, not by honest merit and hard work, does he hope to attain success. The mischief of the system is notorious, and though in a great number of cases the intriguers deceive themselves, though they gain nothing by their efforts to climb up the back stairs to dignities and emoluments, the effect upon the mind of the outside public is the same as if they were justified in their pretensions. The mass of the people in Ireland are firmly convinced that the Castle is a sink of corruption as scandalous as it was in the days when Castlereagh carried the Union by the almost open purchase of a thoroughly base and selfish crew of legislators. If the contempt and disgust with which the majority of Irishmen speak of the Viceroyalty and its surroundings be not justified by facts, it is excused by the unwholesome tone of Dublin society, and by the character of the relations ostensibly subsisting between the frequenters of the court and the dispensers of public patronage.

But it may be urged that the Irish Viceroyalty satisfies the national aspirations of the Irish for something like a national individuality without conceding to them any dangerous power. This is not so; the Irish people who care about nationality at all are rather angered than pleased that the object of their unreasoning devotion should be symbolized in Dublin, in the midst of intrigue and mock magnificence, by an English nobleman. But the fact that Ireland has imposed upon her a figure-head like the Viceroy, perpetuates in the popular mind the unreal notion of her national integrity. If she be a part of the "United Kingdom," why should she have a Viceroy? Why should she be governed otherwise than Wales or Yorkshire? The Irish Nationalists are not slow to draw the inference they want from the facts supplied them by a costly and cumbrous mockery of a distinct monarchy. They say: "You acknowledge that we are a different nation, for you give us a distinct ruler." This is the only substantial result of maintaining the present system, which, however, there is at present no chance whatever of displacing.

A CONVICT GUIDE IN SERVIA.

A RUSSIAN'S VISIT TO THE CITADEL, AND THE INCIDENTS WHICH MADE IT MEMORABLE.

A correspondent of the London Telegraph writes: "The oddities of Belgrade life, normal and abnormal, (certain features of the Russian occupation taking a conspicuous place in the latter category,) would fill a small and singularly diverting volume; but there are serious, even tragical times, during which one hesitates, even under the strongest temptation, to lay stress upon, or even call attention to, the comic aspects of men and things Servian. Nevertheless, one trifling incident of recent occurrence strikes me as being so intrinsically and harmlessly funny that I cannot forbear narrating it, as nearly as possible in the words of the person to whom it happened, a young Russian of my acquaintance here. This gentleman, having demanded and received permission to inspect the citadel, was conducted over the works and the Konak by the Servian commandant, a somewhat stout officer, who, however, when my friend expressed a desire to ascend to the top of the minaret hard by, from which an extensive view of the surrounding country is commanded, excused himself from accompanying M. De —— to that "bad eminence," but offered him a trusty guide, and called up a strapping young fellow in a sort of fatigue uniform of drab-colored canvas, whom he instructed to conduct the Gospodin. Arrived upon the tiny platform, M. De —— first took in the panorama at his leisure, and then bent his eyes downward toward the place fronting the Konak, where he noticed several exceptionally fine men, clad in a costume exactly similar to that worn by his companion. "Tell me," he exclaimed, turning to the latter, "who may those men be, and to what branch of the service do they belong?" "Look, Gospodin," replied his guide, "that one there is the brother of the Minister ——; he has twenty years; it is because he killed his wife. That other one, the tall youth with the sweeping mustache, he will not be here so long. He is the son of Senator ——. He only killed a man who offended him." And thus he went on with his catalogue. It should be remembered that my friend, a slight and somewhat delicate young fellow, was entirely alone with his interlocutor, a sinewy giant of truculent aspect, upon a narrow ledge of stone sixty or seventy feet above the level of the ground. His feelings may be more readily imagined than described when this gentleman in drab, who had just revealed himself, by implication, to be a galeriano, turned to him with hideous jocularity, and, slapping him amicably on the shoulder, observed in a tone of restrained pride, such as is assumed by modest merit, "I also am a twenty years' man, for you see I too have killed my wife." My friend replied, in as steady a voice as he could command for the moment, "That is indeed very remarkable and interesting. Perhaps I am keeping you from your regular avocations? I think, perhaps, we had better go down." When they got to the last step of the staircase, the amiable misogynist turned short around upon M. De ——, and, stretching out his "red right hand," ejaculated, "I like thee. Thou art a good man. Let us cordially shake hands." What was my unfortunate friend to do? Let us mercifully drop a veil over the inevitable accolade—the culminating horror of this tragicomical, eminently Servian episode.

WOMEN AT THE POLLS.

In a letter to a lady in Massachusetts, Mr. Wendell Phillips thus writes: "I want to express my sympathy with you in all you said about ladies going to the polls. The first rough experience is truly hard. I felt for you when you spoke of it, but, my dear friends, I see no escape. The service is very great in value. You will look back on it in years to come with heartfelt satisfaction. One of my lady friends, now in Europe, was circulating anti-slavery petitions years ago in Beacon street, and the lady of the house, hardly her social equal, forbade her leaving the house by the front door, telling her to go out by the back way. Such insults we bore in old times. You won't meet anything so hard to be submitted to at the polls."

A PITIABLE CASE.

The Pottsville (Penn.) Miners' Journal says: "We have once or twice alluded to the sad affliction in the shape of small-pox, which has befallen the family of Mr. John H. Miller, of Warwick township, in Chester county. Three of his children have died, and on Friday his wife was carried off with this loathsome disease. There is no one now left but himself and one child. He can get no one to nurse his family, and even the physicians in the neighborhood refuse to enter his dwelling. The coffins used in the burial of his wife and children were brought by his neighbors near the building, and were taken by Mr. Miller. The corpses were placed in them by himself, the lids were screwed down, and then they were dragged by him into the road, where they were taken by his neighbors and buried."

THE ITALIAN 100-TON GUN.

HYDRAULIC PRESSURE ON A SHIP OF WAR.

HOW THE LARGEST CANNON IN THE WORLD IS OPERATED—THE VELOCITY OF A 2,000-POUND SHOT—A TERRIBLE POWER TO DEAL WITH—THE IRRESISTIBLE FORCE OF WATER CALLED INTO AID.

The correspondent of the London Times of Oct. 24, writes from Spezia, Italy: Not one moment too soon have we made our English 81-ton guns, and even now the Italians are more than abreast of us, for they have launched one ship, the Duilio, prepared for 100-ton guns, and another, the Dandolo, is in course of construction at Spezia. One sample gun has been supplied by Sir William Armstrong & Co.; seven more are in the various stages of completion at Elswick. The Duilio and Dandolo will each carry four of these guns in turrets, and become the most powerfully-armed ships in the world for the time being.

The problem set before Sir W. Armstrong and his partners by the Italian Government was to build a gun, with all its appurtenances, capable of throwing a 2,000-pound shot with such a velocity as would enable it to strike an ironclad with a force of 490 foot tons per inch of the shot's circumference. This would need only an initial velocity of about 1,350 feet a second, and there can be no doubt that such a velocity will easily be attained, and even considerably more; for since the gun was designed, experiments have shown that the power of any existing gun can be much increased by enlarging the powder-chamber, and there is no reason why the 100-ton gun should be an exception to the rule. However, the actual bargain has first to be fulfilled, and we shall now see what means have been taken to produce a force equal to that required to lift 25,000 tons through a space of one foot. Let us take the apparatus in order. First in importance stands the gun itself. Until quite lately a great difficulty stood in the way of artillerists. In order to load a gun within the limited space of a turret, the piece must be short; but short guns do not retain the projectile long enough to receive the full effect of the powder charge. The velocity was, therefore, lower than ought to be given in proportion to the charge and consequent strain on the interior of the gun. To obviate this difficulty, one of the members of the Elswick firm—Mr. Rendel—invented a method of loading the piece outside the turret, but from below the deck, out of danger. His designs have already been carried out in the Thunderer and have answered admirably. We shall come to them presently. Meanwhile we arrive at the point that a long gun can now be worked in a turret without exposing a single man to the enemy's fire. The 100-ton gun is no less than 33 feet long—that is, only 6 feet short of half the length of a full-sized lawn tennis ground. The length of the bore is 30 feet 6 inches, and the interior steel tube is in two pieces. The diameter of the breech is 6 feet 5 inches, and the thickness of the metal round the powder charge is 30 inches. The calibre of the gun is 17 inches, and the grooves for rifling number 27. They are shaped like those of the old breech-loading Armstrong guns, and have a twist which rises from one turn in 150 feet at the breech to one turn in 50 feet near the muzzle, continuing at that inclination to the end of the bore. The gun is not yet chambered, but probably may be hereafter. The Palliser shell thrown by this monster weighs 2,000 pounds, or not far short of a ton, and stands 4 feet high. It is rather sharper pointed than the usual shape, and has no studs or projections of any sort on its body. The method of giving it the rifled spin in the bore is peculiar, and produces one of the best effects claimed as the birth-right of breech-loading guns, namely, closing up all windage. A cup of copper, with a little zinc in it, fits on to the base of the shot, which is grooved to hold it fast. When the gun is fired the first pressure of the gas produced drives the cup forward, fills up the grooves of the gun, and, gripping the shot tight, forces it to spin with the velocity impressed upon it by the maximum inclination of the grooves—namely, one turn in fifty feet of its progress. The powder is the same as that used with the 81-ton gun; each grain has a thickness of one and a half inches, and, when all details are settled, will probably weigh about 350 pounds.

Now, such a mass as 100 tons of metal leaping backwards with a recoil from the effort of throwing a shot of 2,000 pounds with a high velocity is a terrible power to deal with in any case—much more when it has to be stopped before it has moved four feet. The mere lifting such a gun is too much for any chains, so that a crane, with a solid rod to hang the gun to, had to be devised. How, then, is the monster to be controlled when in the midst of his violent recoil? And how is he to be pushed forward again? By the simplest and commonest agent—water. If water be confined in a tube without means of escape, it will stop anything so long as the tube does not burst, and if it be allowed but small means of escape, it will check the action of any force and delay it while the liquid is taking the necessary time to escape. On the other hand, if water be pressed through a small tube, say one inch square, by a force equal to the weight of one pound, so that it rushes into a large tube, say one foot square, it will act on any opposing body with a force equal to the one pound multiplied by the number of square inches which there are in a square foot—that is, 144. Thus, a pressure of one pound in the small tube may be made, speaking roughly, to move 144 pounds in the large tube. These two principles of the science of hydraulics have been brought to bear on gun carriages. The recoil is checked by water in a large tube unable to escape except through small holes, and then under the pressure of spiral springs which have a force of over fifty atmospheres, and make the exit difficult. The gun is moved forward, elevated, or depressed by forcing water through a small tube into a large one, where it acts with greatly multiplied force on the weight to be moved. Once accept this principle, and all becomes easy and simple. No more complicated apparatus of wheels, ropes, pulleys, and chains. The gun is placed with its trunnions resting in two blocks of metal, which slide on fixed beams built in the floor of the turret. Guides prevent the sliding blocks from moving right or left or jumping. Behind the blocks are cylinders which act the part of the large tubes spoken of above—pistons attached to the rear of the blocks work in these cylinders and can be driven forward by the action of water forced through small pipes into the larger cylinders by means of the steam power always available on board turret ships. The breech of the gun is supported on a beam, which again has a hydraulic ram underneath it, so that the breech can be raised or lowered as may be wished—that is, the gun can be depressed or elevated. The rear end of the beam pivots vertically on a horizontal pin, and to this spot the breech always comes when the gun is run back, either by the natural recoil or the artificial running back. Thus, whenever the gun is fully back it must be horizontal, and all danger of its striking the top of the port in the turret is avoided. However high the muzzle may be uplifted when the piece is fired, it bows again to the horizontal position as it comes back after firing.

The next point is the loading arrangements. Think of the difficulty to be overcome. Here is a turret exposed to the fire of the enemy's small arms and shrapnel, and the gun is so long that its muzzle is always outside the turret. Into that muzzle must be a sponge to clean it, a jet of water to wash it, and extinguish any remains of fire left from the discharge, a cartridge weighing at least as much as two heavy men, and a shot the weight of which falls little short of a ton; and all this must be done quickly with avoidance of all nervousness. A shot must be properly rammed home, lest the gun should be strained or even burst. Here again comes to the aid of the artillerist the silent, calm, irresistible force of water. The muzzle of the gun is depressed till it comes opposite a round iron door leading below the deck. The door, which is covered from the enemy's fire by a hood formed by sloping plates of iron, glides back, and the head of an enormous sponge appears, carried in front of a metal rod. Swiftly and silently it enters the bore of the gun, lengthening itself like a telescope till it reaches the bottom of the bore, when a spring is touched, a valve opens and a deluge of water rushes from the head of the sponge, extinguishing every possible trace of fire. Obedient to the touch of one man on a handle, the sponge will advance and retire as often as is willed, then withdrawn, leaving room for the cartridge to appear. Cartridge and shot are safe below the deck, each shot with its charge on a separate truck in the magazine always stowed in readiness for use at the moment of action. A word from the turret causes the truck with its freight of ammunition to be run out on to a small trap door on the main deck. Instantly the door rises, till the cartridge is in the turret between the sponge head and the gun, which receives it by a short, quick thrust of the sponge-head, now become a rammer. Another short lift by the same power, always water, and the shot is in front of the muzzle. The sponge-rammer then sends home the shot and charge together perfectly steadily, and always by means of the water power. Before going further, let us mark a peculiarity in the cartridge. It is not solid. A hollow cone of brass runs up from its base to its centre, and near the centre only does the ignition take place through the vent, which is in rear of the gun in the axis line.

Thus we have all the work done by water—hydraulic pressure, as it is called. If the gun has to be run forward, hydraulic pressure at any pressure up to fifty atmospheres is brought to bear behind the trunnion pistons. The same force is applied in front through another small tube, if the piece has to be run back. Only in case of the desperate force of recoil do the springs come into play, because they hold down the valves with a power sufficient to close the large cylinder during all ordinary conditions of working the gun. A pressure of fifty atmospheres is taken as sufficient for all ordinary purposes, and the springs are not moved nor the valves opened till the pressure has become considerably higher. Hydraulic pressure is used to lift the ammunition from the main deck to the level of the fire in the turret, to cleanse the gun, and to ram home the cartridge and shot together.

A PANTHER IN ULSTER COUNTY.

The Rondout Freeman of Monday says: "At the head of the Rondout creek, last week, Mr. Reuben Davis, sawyer for Joseph Hill, on a visit to his bear traps, saw the track of a very large panther. In the same snow these tracks were seen by two men looking for hoop-poles, and also by Mr. Lewis Dubois, who had just moved into his bark shanty and brought with him a hog he had killed, the scent of which, some think, drew the animal. Some think it followed Mr. Davis out when he came."

As we go to press we find reason to claim 181 electoral votes for the Republican candidates, and to concede 184 votes to the Democrats. The only State still in doubt is Florida. When a straw so light as that turns the scale, the equal poise of the contending forces becomes very obvious indeed.

The Congressional gains are slightly on the side of the Republicans. Iowa gives one. Massachusetts has substituted three Republicans for Democrats, with a straight Republican instead of SEELYE, and BANKS re-elected on a straight party ticket. From Pennsylvania we have positive information of two seats rescued from the Democrats, with rumors pointing to the success of half a dozen others. Missouri has given us Republican members in the First, Second, Sixth, and Tenth Districts. In Illinois also one district (the First,) has been transferred to the Republicans. Thus, our assured gains number eleven, with two doubtful districts converted into certainties, and a probability of yet larger accessions from Pennsylvania. On the other hand, the Republicans have lost two districts in this State, including that contested by Mr. SPAULDING, but have gained the Eighth District, electing Mr. MCCOOK; they have lost one in South Carolina and two in Mississippi. In Massachusetts, Gen. BUTLER has been elected by a large majority. The next House will probably have a Democratic majority of twenty-five, against seventy-three in the present one.

The State of New-York has undoubtedly gone Democratic, but the fancy majority so confidently claimed by the Tilden men is not forthcoming. The majorities in New-York and Kings have swept everything before them, though Republicans in the interior have made one of the most gallant fights known in the history of the State. The Legislature remains Republican, as but few gains in Assemblymen have been made by the Democrats, and as the majority in the Senate has been saved by the election of a Republican from the Erie district, and the election of Mr. SEWARD in this City.

With the possible exception of Coroner CROKER all the nominees on the Democratic County ticket have been elected. Gov. DIX runs a few thousand behind the Republican State ticket, while Judge PEABODY has at least come near being elected Surrogate, and Mr. STINER is probably chosen one of the three Coroners. This state of things is a suggestive commentary on the wisdom of those party managers who placed a straight ticket for Municipal and Judicial officers in the field and refused all co-operation with respectable Democrats opposed to Tammany Hall. If any of the Republican candidates has escaped defeat, it is only by virtue of the aid of the very element which our party managers refused to recognize.

The county ticket presented as a result of the fusion between Anti-Ring Democrats and Republicans in Kings County, has probably been elected. The contest has, however, been too close to be decided by anything short of the complete returns, which are as yet not forthcoming. Whatever be the result, enough has been done to show how Ring influence in Brooklyn can be finally shattered, and how those who pay the taxes can bring to account those who spend them.

Details are wanting in regard to the fate of the constitutional amendments, and complaints reach us that in some districts of this City ballots were not furnished to enable voters to express their preference for or against them. The Democrats, in no case that we know of, furnished ballots for this purpose. But as there seems to have been no organized effort to distribute canceled ballots, the amendments are probably adopted.

A DOUBTFUL ELECTION.

At the time of going to press the result of the Presidential election is still in doubt. Enough has been learned to show that the vote has been unprecedentedly heavy. Both parties have exhausted their full legitimate strength, while the peculiar Democratic policy, for which such extensive preparations were made in the large registry in this city and in the enormous registry in Brooklyn, has had its effect.

In this State, two hundred and fifty-six voting districts outside the Cities of New-York and Brooklyn show a net Democratic gain over 1872 of 6,427. In that year the Republican majority, excluding the two cities named, was 79,720. This year New-York City has given 53,500 Democratic, while the returns from Brooklyn represent a majority of 17,792, the combined majority being 71,292. On the basis of the returns from the remainder of the State, there is little hope of overcoming this majority, and the Electoral vote of New-York will be cast for Mr. TILDEN. That this is largely due to fraud in New-York and Kings County, and that an honest vote in these counties might have changed the result, are conclusions which no intelligent and fair observer can refuse to consider. The exact truth in regard to them cannot now be stated, but it will be ascertained, and it must have its weight.

Conceding New-York to Mr. TILDEN, he will receive the electoral votes of the following States:

Alabama	10	Missouri	15
Arkansas	6	New-Jersey	9
Connecticut	6	New-York	35
Delaware	3	North Carolina	10
Georgia	11	Tennessee	12
Indiana	15	Texas	8
Kentucky	12	Virginia	11
Maryland	8	West Virginia	5
Mississippi	8
Total			184

Gen. HAYES will receive the votes of the following States:

California	6	Nebraska	3
Colorado	3	Nevada	3
Illinois	21	New-Hampshire	5
Iowa	11	Ohio	3
Kansas	5	Oregon	22
Louisiana	8	Pennsylvania	29
Maine	7	Rhode Island	4
Massachusetts	13	South Carolina	7
Michigan	11	Vermont	5
Minnesota	5	Wisconsin	10
Total			181

This leaves Florida alone still in doubt. If the Republicans have carried that State, as they claim, they will have 185 votes—a majority of one.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION AND THE TRUANTS.

At the recent meeting of the Board of Education a motion was adopted as to conferring with the Managers of the Juvenile Asylum for the purpose of providing a Truant Home. It was stated that the Board of Apportionment had thrown out the appropriation of $100,000 which would have enabled the School Trustees to support their own place of detention for truants. In this matter the Board of Apportionment has unquestionably acted wisely. The law in regard to compulsory school attendance left the whole matter of the mode of detention of truants and school absentees in uncertainty. The School Trustees were empowered to arrest and detain such children as violated the law, and the Police were obliged to assist. But nothing was said as to the place of detention. This omission has caused the law in some of our smaller towns to be inoperative. The Trustees did not wish to confine truant or street-wandering children in the common jail or the House of Refuge. The asylums would not receive them without some especial arrangement, and the school authorities had no means for opening a Truant Home. The consequence has been, in the interior, that the children have been discharged, and the Compulsory law has been practically inoperative. In this City, where the difficulty has been the greatest, the Superintendent of Truancy has been compelled to send some of the children to the House of Refuge, some to the Alms-house School on Randall's Island, and others to different institutions. But the House of Refuge—a prison or reformatory for young thieves and criminals—is manifestly not the place for children who are merely truants. The Randall's Island School has been broken up, and even were it existing, is not the place for such children.

The Board of Commissioners then thought of making use of the privilege given by the law, and founding their own Truant Asylum. But, plainly, a board to whom so delicate and important an interest as popular education has been intrusted, had better not complicate it with anything so invidious and difficult as the administering punishment to vagrant and semi-criminal youth. The mere fact of the Trustees of the schools having a boys' prison under them would tend to mingle in the popular mind the two subjects of education and punishment, and would take from the feeling of the masses that sense of their freely sharing in a great blessing which they now have. The poor and working classes of this country believe that education is one of the rights and privileges of freemen. It would be a pity to leave the impression that the managers of the schools were also the managers of the places of punishment. Let the school and the prison be completely separate. For this or some other reason the Board of Apportionment threw out the estimate for the Truant Home. Now there is nothing to prevent the Board of Education from using existing institutions. There are plenty of these for every class of truant and vagrant children, and it would only add to public expenditures without corresponding gain to open another.

The Truant Superintendent can send his ragged and dirty children to the Industrial Schools; his homeless ones to the Boys' Lodging-houses; those who are persistently vagrant to the Juvenile Asylum; the semi-criminal and thievish to the Roman Catholic Protectory or the House of Refuge; and short sentences in some of these houses would, no doubt, soon transform these little vagabonds into industrious school-attendants. But beyond this, the Board ought this Winter to seek so to amend the law, as to give them a clear right to break up street vagrancy among children. The law gives them this right now, but not in sufficiently explicit terms to induce them to take vigorous action. It would be easy, however, to append a provision which would enable the truant agents to require of every child engaged in peddling or any street occupation a certificate showing that he had been under, say, half-time school instruction for six months. This would at once force the hundreds of Italian boot-blacks and news-boys and little peddlers into school during a part of the day, and prevent a great population from growing up in ignorance.

CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES.

Lord DUFFERIN said well to the good citizens of Ottawa the other day. The people of the United States regard Canada with the greatest kindliness and good will, notwithstanding whatever demagogues may say in hopes of making political hits, and notwithstanding the belligerent stand of certain excitable natives of Ireland. The thirst for our neighbor's land which seemed to possess us in the early years of this century was never real. In the Southern States it was a morbid craving of a community sick with the plague of slavery; in the North and West it was the delusion of a few hare-brained theorists and a goodly number of politicians, who hoped to reap something from a war, if they did not at once make something substantial out of their alliance with the slave party. The real sentiment of the vast honest majority was opposed to increasing the limits of the United States in any other than an honorable way, but, as usual, that majority had hard work to get its sentiment heard and obeyed. Undoubtedly the war with Mexico was popular at the time, but it must be remembered that the Mexicans themselves played into the hands of the Americans who instigated that war, until there seemed to be very good cause for aggression. As we look back, however, we find little to be proud of in the Mexican business, except the behavior of the little invading Army in the presence of superior forces and in the heart of a hostile country.

Canada, on the other hand, has never presented the same excuses for ambitious demagogues and glory-seeking military men. Even during the angry days of the late civil war, when Canada became, as in Revolutionary times, the refuge of disunionists and copperheads, the solid common sense of North Americans in Canada and the United States never allowed the hard feeling which the situation naturally produced to throw them off their balance. Nor in the equally trying emergency of a Fenian raid was there for a moment a doubt of the true feeling on both sides. President GRANT laid a firm hand on the misguided men who hoped to strike at the British Government by attacking our northern neighbor, and the Fenian movement collapsed as suddenly as all such attacks must, when they have behind them only the ambitions of party leaders and the enthusiasm born of ignorance.

When one reflects on such a phenomenon as the Fenian movement, the word ignorance appears to be a clumsy one to express the attitude of Irishmen who lend themselves to such ideas. The more Irishmen and Ireland itself are studied, the more two things appear. In the first place, the Irishman resolves himself into an intimate mixture of Keltic, Danish, Norse, Anglo-Norman, and Anglo-Saxon stocks, and therefore into a sort of twin brother to Scotchman or Englishman, and in the second place his character develops the most amiable traits. The cultivated Irishman, who has freed himself from national and religious prejudices, is about as charming a person as the civilized world produces. He has all the vivacity and quickness of the uncultured sons of Eiriun, with little, or less, of that instability of character, of that openness to the wiles of designing leaders, which have kept Ireland from her natural position as the equal, if not in many ways the superior, of other parts of Great Britain. But Canada contains elements not so much dissimilar. The Keltic element is represented by the old French settlers, diluted, it is true, by the various waves of Teutonic population which swept over France. Scotland has also done a great deal to populate Canada, and the Scotch have a fair share of old Irish blood. Finally England has sent forth her bone and sinew of Anglo-Saxon and Anglo-Norman settlers, until all these elements have so intermingled that the question of race may be said to be at an end. If it be hard, in tracing back Irish, Scotch, and English history of former centuries, to see why any one of those nations should reasonably claim a separate stock, much more is it difficult to identify the inhabitants of Canada or the United States with any race. The term Anglo-Saxon, which Lord DUFFERIN used in his address to the Corporation of Ottawa, is as good as another. It has become the fashion; but Anglo-Norman or British might be words with even more claims to exactness. When, therefore, the prejudiced men calling themselves "Fenians" gathered together to make war on Canada, they were simply attempting to cut the throats of their own brethren, little as they realized the fact. For Irishmen can only claim a separate nationality by reason of their Keltic blood; but that blood is by no means confined to Ireland. Even through the Green Isle it is distributed in varying quantity, while, besides that, it acts as a vivifying agent, not only throughout all the English-speaking colonies and the United States, but through the very heart of England herself.

The United States may be separated from Canada by an imaginary line, but their interests are identical. The closer the ties are drawn between the two, the better for both. And in respect to Lord DUFFERIN himself, while it is true that through him the United States honor Canada, as he himself modestly put it, yet no one is likely to forget the man himself as a contributor to literature and science. His journal of a yacht voyage to Polar latitudes will always be a pleasant and instructive friend, while his liberal and sensible attitude toward the questions of moment here and in England will attract those who care less for literature than for politics.

THE PROBABLE COURSE OF AUSTRIA.

Our readers will remember that we anticipated the refusal of the Austrian Cabinet to be drawn into the Russian alliance, or to take part with the Turks, before the telegrams announcing this policy reached these shores. It appears now from the foreign journals that the difference in opinion within the Austro-Hungarian Cabinet on these lines of policy were sharp and severe. Count ANDRASSY is an enthusistic Magyar; the Magyars received their greatest national humiliation through the Russians. The surrender of Vilagos will never be forgotten in Hungary. Their exiles after this fatal defeat were hospitably received and sheltered by the Turks, and their surrender to the Austrians was refused. The southern Sclavs in Croatia and Hungary and on the frontiers have been the most determined enemies of the Magyars. They number several millions, and their representatives in the Parliament at Pesth form a compact minority, always ready to side with the Austrians or any party against the Magyars.

The Hungarian element in the Cabinet, which has been the leading influence, no doubt temporarily resisted the proposals of the Czar for a united occupation of Bosnia and Bulgaria, tempting as this proposal must have been. Still, the Sclavic party and the wishes of the Emperor himself tended toward this policy, and ultimately the interests of the Empire may lead to its adoption, for such an alliance would insure a considerable addition to the territory of the Empire, and would insure the freedom of the Danube to Austria.

Of all European powers, Austria has the deepest interest in the Eastern question. Her railroads and lines of travel and commerce all connect with European Turkey, and will in time be the communications of an important trade with Constantinople and the East. Her frontiers lie just along the disturbed districts. Millions of her people are bound in blood and sympathy with the suffering rayahs of Bosnia and Herzegovina. An addition to her Sclavonic provinces nearer the Black Sea would be welcome to the Croats and Sclovacks, and would not be disagreeable to the Germans. It would especially be a great safeguard to her commerce and a stimulus to her future trade. But the Magyars have not simply opposed the Russian alliance. They have shown what might almost be called a race-sympathy for the Turks. They prefer the Moslem Turks to the Christian Sclavonians. They have been almost ready to urge the Emperor to oppose the ambition of the Czar, provided he could secure an ally in England. The sufferings of their fellow-Christians in Bulgaria have been sneered at, and the barbarities of the Russians in former wars described. The ambition of Servia has been sternly rebuked, and the Magyars, forgetting their own century-long sufferings and oppression under the Turks, and the devastation and long-continued ruin of their fairest territory under these savages, have been ready to leave the unfortunate Christians of European Turkey under the worst Government of modern times. In fact, neither in Pesth nor Vienna has there been much sympathy for the victims of Mohammedan cruelty.

Under these two opposing influences, the Austrian Cabinet and the Emperor have been obliged to act. Germany, too, the leading power of Europe, has been the silent force behind them, which must determine their course. The Germans, as such, have, however, no sympathy one way or the other in this struggle between the Sclavs and the Turks. Yet any course which might offend the Germans of the Austrian Provinces, was to be carefully avoided, lest it should tend to an absorption of those in the German Empire. Prince BISMARCK's sole interest, as we have all along pointed out, was to retain the Russian alliance of friendship, or to leave Russia to its Eastern projects, so as to keep her separate from any possible alliance with France and to allow her to exhaust herself. It was not probable, then, that he would permit any movement of Austria against Russia, but an alliance with the latter, or neutrality, he would not oppose.

The result of all these varying forces, then, is that Austria cannot and will not help Turkey; that she may unite with Russia to plunder the effects of "the Sick Man," but that more probably she will either preserve neutrality or will associate herself with the European powers to enforce reforms in Turkey, and possibly to create new Sclavonic States. This last policy, however, is one entirely opposed to the strong anti-Sclavic feeling which rules her councils, and she would only consent to it from necessity. Yet it is the policy most likely to satisfy Europe, to avert danger in future, and to check Russia on one side and protect the Christians on the other.

A NEEDED REFORM.

The fight between the two rival factions into which the barbers of our country are now unhappily divided, grows fiercer every day; and the noise and dust of the conflict threaten to totally blind the eyes of the most intelligent barbers—as with misapplied bay rum—to the true interests of their profession. Those who style themselves the only legitimate and artistic practitioners of the tonsorial art denounce with vast energy the conduct of certain interlopers who have lowered the dignity of the profession by bribing the public with free cigars and gratuitous beer, to come and be shaved at half the regular rate. Barbers who have hitherto found no lack of customers who were anxious to be shaved at the rate of ten cents per beard, forsee that when a rival offers to shave for five cents, and to throw in a glass of beer or a cigar, the dignity and interests of legitimate practitioners must suffer. It is, of course, inevitable, that they should be indignant, and that they should strive by every lawful means to thwart the purpose of the cheap and sensational barbers, but it is saddening to note that as yet, they have failed to perceive the one sure and easy method of driving the cheap barber out of business, and at the same time instituting a reform that would in a brief period enormously increase the number of their clients.

There is not at present a single barber in the active practice of his profession who is not addicted to the degrading vices of conversation and "tonics." No sooner does a customer seat himself in the operating chair than the barber begins to converse with him in a confident and shameless manner that is in the highest degree exasperating. No man with a razor at his throat and his nose imprisoned in the grasp of a conversational adversary dare resent the latter's remarks; and hence, maddening as the barber's conversation invariably is, the sufferer has to bear it in silence and without any outward manifestation of pain. Were the persecutor to confine himself to extraneous topics, his conversation might be more easily endured, but the contemptuous way in which he never fails to suggest that his victim imperatively needs to be "shampooed," or, in case he has at any time shaved himself, that he has, in so doing, betrayed a painful degree of imbecility, is utterly destructive of one's self-respect, in addition to his temporary peace of mind.

The worst features of tonsorial depravity are, however, exhibited in connection with the inevitable "tonic" which every barber offers for sale. No matter what may be the condition of the customer's hair—whether it is soft or coarse, black or gray, thick or thin—the barber informs him that he must use the "tonic" or he is lost. To sell to every customer a bottle of tonic is the unswerving purpose of every barber, and it is only the exceptionally obstinate and courageous man who escapes. In every barber's shop there are rows upon rows of bottles filled with "tonic" and bearing the names of victims who have been forced to purchase them. The story of their weakness and defeat is thus constantly kept before their eyes, and so depressing is its effect that the man who has once bought a bottle of "tonic" is thenceforth the barber's slave. He may never use that bottle, but when, after an interval of two weeks, the barber tells him that the bottle is empty and that he needs a new bottle, he buys it without a word of protest. To the philosophic mind, the sight of these rows of purchased bottles is inexpressibly painful, for it is a proof of crime on the one part and of weakness on the other, which might well shake the firmest faith in human nature.

Now, what the barber ambitious of custom needs to do is not to bribe customers with vain beer and cigars that punish with the smoking, but to abandon at once and forever the vicious habits which repel every man who has the skill and courage to shave himself. Were there a barber in this City who would sign and keep a pledge of total abstinence from conversation in any form, and who would announce that in no circumstances would a drop of "tonic" be introduced into his shop, he would be overwhelmed with custom. The shop where a man can be shaved in absolute silence, and where no tribute for "tonic" is ever levied, is the ideal shop of which poets have sung and visionary reformers have dreamed. What is beer in comparison with silence, or the presence of cigars in comparison with the absence of "tonic"? Let the earnest barbers agree to abandon conversation and "tonic," and they will straightway find more customers at fifty cents each, than the sensational barbers can secure by their low prices and corrupt bribes. Of course, it would be exceedingly difficult for a veteran barber to suddenly abandon his vices by mere force of will; but he could assist himself on the path of silence by persistently wearing a large plaster over his mouth. This plaster would inspire confidence in the public breast, and would prevent the barber from yielding to his vicious inclinations, while, by erecting a shop absolutely without shelves or closets, he could also wean himself from his love of "tonic." Thus would the habit of virtue become confirmed, until at length the barber could trust himself to shave without his plaster, and the public would feel absolutely safe from "tonic." It remains to be seen whether the barbers are hopelessly wedded to their vices, or whether, in our day, the reformed barber will break his bottles of "tonic," provide himself with a plaster, and silently shave his way to fortune.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

THE DECAY OF SEAMANSHIP.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

It is my wish to reply in your valuable paper to a statement made and copied in your paper from the London News, "English Seamanship Degenerating." The reason for the loss of so many vessels, lives, &c., for the past few years is solely for the want of knowledge (of those in command of seagoing vessels) of the mariners' compass.

The seamen of to-day are the same, if not superior to what they were some years back; they are as a rule a superior and a better educated class. We have made heavy strides in ship-building, but none has been made in the navigation of those vessels, viz., in the understanding of the workings of the "magnetic needle." We know or ought to know, that the needle very seldom points to the true North, nor have we any means of correcting the deviations, except by the use of "azimuths," which are at the best merely theoretical. The loss of vessels will still increase until some reliable mode of correcting the compasses can be established.

The marine insurance companies as a rule are perfectly indifferent to these losses; it is money with them. They have given no encouragement to parties for the purpose of arriving at a practical way to enable the masters of vessels to regulate their compasses. If such support had been given by these companies or ship-owners we should not now hear of so many losses, both in lives and property.

THE GRAND BOULEVARD.

To the Editor of The New-York Times:

The communication of "Septimus" in your issue of 5th inst., regarding the enormous assessment about to be levied for the Grand Boulevard, is of great importance to the owners of property affected by it, and not only demands their attention but their immediate action, to prevent, if possible, its confirmation. It is supposed that this Grand Boulevard was made for the benefit of the city at large, and the owners of property on the line, having already been heavily assessed for the expense of opening and the land taken for its construction, should be exempt from any further payment. Lot owners interested in the proposed assessment should at once meet and adopt measures to contest it.

Future generations may possibly derive a benefit from the numerous parks and boulevards recently made in the upper part of our City, but to the property owners, with the exception of those whose land has been taken by the City for the improvements, they have been ruinous.

BOULEVARD.

HOW THE WATER GOES.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

You were kind enough to publish a communication from the writer a few days since about hydrants, and as the water famine is increasing, and no attention paid to the open hydrants by the proper department, will you please say for Mr. Campbell's benefit, that the hydrant foot of Thirty-fifth street, North River, is still open and has been all Summer. No longer ago than Friday last I saw a boy turn on the water to get a drink, and fully a barrel of water was wasted. Besides this, the hydrant leaks, and a stream of water is constantly running from it. If Mr. Campbell tried to remedy this, he could do so, but just before election everybody is busy, and two or three open hydrants won't amount to much.

HAYES AND WHEELER.

FATAL SHOOTING AFFRAY.

BOSTON, Nov. 7.—At 1 o'clock this morning some members of a political club attempted to break down the door of the premises of Adam Horn, Jamaica Plains, in order to procure liquor. Horn fired into the crowd, killing a man named William Fleming. Another of the attacking party, Robert H. Richard by name, was shot through the lungs, and is in a critical condition. Horn was seriously injured by his assailants, and is now in the City Hospital.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

CONNECTICUT.

HARTFORD, Nov. 8—1 A. M.—Complete returns from New-Haven give Tilden a majority over Hayes of 1,874, and Hubbard 1,860 over Robinson. The Greenback candidate received but 311 votes a pitiful falling off from the expected ballot. Phelps for Congress in the Second District, leads Kellogg, Rep., by 2,130 votes. Two Democratic Representatives have been elected in New-Haven. The Democratic vote in that city has been increased by nearly 2,000 votes since the election of 1872.

1:30 A. M.—The Republicans concede Connecticut to Tilden and Hubbard by about ninetern hundred majority. Hubbard's plurality over all is 2,500.

NEW-HAVEN, Nov. 7—12 M.—The Town of New Haven gives the Democratic electoral ticket 1,824 majority. Shelton, Democratic candidate for Mayor of this city, is elected by 446 majority; Phelps, Democratic candidate for Congress in this district, is re-elected over Kellogg by a majority something less than that of two years ago. The State will be close but undoubtedly will give a small majority for Tilden.

MISCELLANEOUS RETURNS.

HARTFORD, Nov. 7.—Thirty-eight towns give Hayes 8,267; Tilden, 7,601; Robinson, Rep., for Governor, 7,375; Hubbard, Dem., for Governor, 6,805. These towns last Spring gave Robinson, Rep., 6,112; Ingersoll, Dem., 6,514. The Republican majority is 505, against a Democratic majority last year of 402; Republican gain, 907. This includes no city whatever.

Hartford gives Tilden a plurality of 939. The Democratic majority last Spring was 676; this is a Democratic gain in the city of 313.

Meriden gives Hayes 27 majority; a Democratic loss of 216.

Hartford gives Hayes 4,033; Tilden, 5,019; Cooper, 79; Smith, 8; Robinson, 4,128; Hubbard, 4,940; Atwater, (Greenback,) 68; Cummings, 12. In 1872 Greeley's vote over Grant was 469; in 1876, Ingersoll, Dem., over Robinson, 676; Democratic gain over 1872 of 517, and 310 over 1876.

For Congress, Hartford gives Hawley 4,234; Landers, 4,837; Landers' plurality, 603. In 1875, Landers' plurality, 469; Democratic gain on Congress of 134.

Bridgeport gives Hayes 2,389; Tilden, 3,134; Robinson, 2,368; Hubbard, 3,124; Democratic gain, 198.

Norwalk gives Hayes 1,358; Tilden, 1,245; Robinson, 1,341; Hubbard, 1,234; Republican gain, 55.

New-Britain—Hayes, 1,183; Tilden, 1,352; Robinson, 1,176; Hubbard, 1,357; Republican gain, 120.

Norwich gives Hayes 1,995; Tilden, 1,747; Robinson, 1,972; Hubbard, 1,766; Democratic gain, 53.

Ninety-four town gives Hayes 32,302; Tilden, 33,145; Robinson, 32,266; Hubbard, 33,207. These towns lasts Spring gave Robinson 24,435; Ingersoll, 28,398. Democratic majority so far, 1,001, against 3,963 last Spring.

11 P. M.—The Senate in all probability is Republican, the Republicans carrying the following of the twenty-one district: Second, Sixth, (probably) Eighth, Ninth, Twelfth, (probably) Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth, Nineteen, Twentieth, and Twenty-first.

Returns from seventy-eight towns show a net Republican gain in the lower house of 30. There seems no doubt that the Legislature is Republican in both branches.

Returns from 120 towns give Hayes 39,879, and Tilden 40,722. These towns, last spring, gave Robinson 29,835, and Ingersoll 34,969, a Democratic loss of 4,291.

Gen. Hawley is defeated for Congress in the First District by about 150.

THE LATEST ASPECT OF THE CONTEST—WHERE THE DEMOCRATS GOT THEIR MAJORITIES—THE HAUNTS OF VICE OVERRULING THE VIRTUOUS COMMUNITIES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARTFORD, Nov. 8.—The Republicans certainly made a determined fight throughout the State in the face of numerical odds and Barnum's "mules." It was a contest waged upon the legitimate merits of the campaign, and there could not be supplied even money enough to pay for the speakers needed and other proper expenses. The Democracy have been abundantly supplied with money, and with it were able, at the last moment, to repair what had seemed to be irreparable in New-Haven. In all the cities they found it necessary to pay roundly to secure their own party vote. Saloon-keepers were liberally supplied, and in the strong Democratic wards the need of temperance reform was painfully manifest. In two of the lower wards of this city more than 1,000 majority was obtained, and the Republicans about the polls were subjected to insults and downright intimidation. But in spite of all, the Republicans have succeeded in the State at large handsomely, as their vote in the country shows. The intelligence and virtuous sentiment of the State, as is the case invariably when Democratic reform succeeds, are overthrown by the ignorant and vicious population of a few localities. The result will show that in less than ten wards, aggregating not over six per cent. of the entire vote of the State, the Democratic majority has been secured. How grandly the country has done is evident in the certain majority of two obtained in the Senate, which is a gain of nine members out of a total membership of twenty-one. The members elected from the even districts serve for two years under the new Constitutional amendments, and six of these are Republicans and four Democrats. This is an important advantage, in view of the fact that the Legislature to be chosen next Fall must elect a United States Elector, to succeed W. H. Barnum. There is every indication that the House is Republican, and if it should so turn out, the Republicans will make haste to undo the Democratic partisan legislation of the past three years, by which fraudulent certificate voting and naturalizations have been encouraged, and to which has been largely due the Democratic success.

The result in the Congress districts is as follows: First District, Hawley, Rep., defeated by over 100 plurality, a Democratic falling off of about 600. Second District Phelps, Dem., re-elected by 2,800, a gain of 1,400. Third District, Wait, Rep., re-elected by 1,400, a gain of 800. Fourth District, Warner, Dem., elected by 1,000, a Democratic falling off of 400. This leaves the delegation as in the last Congress.

PENNSYLVANIA.

THE KEYSTONE STATE IN LINE WITH 30,000 REPUBLICAN MAJORITY—A PROBABLE GAIN OF SEVEN OR EIGHT CONGRESSMEN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 7.—Returns from all over the State, embracing, however, but a small portion of the whole number of election precincts, give over twenty thousand net Republican gain over the majorities of last year. A continuance of the same ratio of gains for the whole State would carry the majority to 30,000. Many of these gains are from Democratic strongholds. There is no definite news from the Congressional Districts, but the gains are probably seven or eight.

THE STATE OVERWHELMINGLY REPUBLICAN—A GAIN OF TWO CONGRESSMEN IN THE TWENTY-SECOND AND TWENTY-THIRD DISTRICTS—REPUBLICAN GAINS EVERYWHERE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 7.—The election of to-day was one of the most exciting ever known in this city and brought out a very full vote. The weather was good and there were no disturbances. Interest centred chiefly in the Congressional contests in the Twenty-second and Twenty-third Distrits, and it was expected that there would be much scratching, owing to personal animosities. This, however, was not the case, both candidates, Errett and Bayne, running well up to the party vote, and there is no question of the election of both. This is a Republican gain, the district now being represented by Hopkins and Cochran, Dem.

Latest returns and estimates up to this hour, 11 P. M., give Errett a majority of from 1,500 to 2,000, while Bayne is said to have at least 3,000. The Republicans claim the election of three State Senators, with one in doubt, and the full Assembly delegation except three members. Two years ago, the Democrats elected eleven out of the fourteen Assemblymen.

The Republican majority in the county will probably reach 7,000, and may go to 8,000. No returns have been received from adjacent Congressional districts. Fifty-five districts, official, show Republican gains of 1,265.

A REPUBLICAN GAIN OF 284 IN 125 TOWNS—DEMOCRATIC GAINS IN PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 7.—The returns from 125 towns outside of this city show a net Republican gain of 284. Nine wards of this city, complete, show a Democratic gain of 1,198. Rowan, the Republican candidate for Sheriff of Philadelphia County, is probably defeated.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 8.—Reports up to 1 A. M. in Allegheny County indicate a Republican majority on the county ticket of about 8,000. Byne, the Republican Congressman in the Twenty-third District, is elected by nearly 3,000. Erret, Rep., for Congress in Twenty-second District, claims 2,500, but the Democrats do not concede the district yet.

THE REPUBLICAN MAJORITY PLACED, BY CAREFUL ESTIMATE, AT FROM 18,000 TO 20,000—AN IMPORTANT GAIN IN CONGRESSMEN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 7.—So far as the result of the Presidential election depends on the vote of Pennsylvania, there is, at 11:30, this evening, no doubt to be admitted. The Democratic committee have given up the State, and only dispute about the majority. They claim that the vote outside Philadelphia will be about even, and that the city will determine the majority, which they assert will not be above 16,000. The city count is not in, but it is claimed by the Republicans to have given 18,000 to 20,000. The Republican returns, while not exactly decisive, indicate a majority of several thousand outside Philadelphia. The gains are almost uniformly in favor of the Republicans. Senator Wallace last night claimed the State by 30,000 for Tilden, and staked his reputation on it. He was within 60,000 of the right figures. The expectations of the Republican managers of the canvass have thus far been fully met.

There have been no reports from the Congressional districts, but the Republicans doubtless gain seven or eight, as was expected, since the general returns indicate that result.

There is intense anxiety here to know how New-York has gone, as it is seen to be the decisive State in the contest. The reported majority for Tilden in the City has caused long faces among Republicans, who do not, however, give up this State, but wait for further news. The Democrats claim New-York, of course, but not yet very boldly, evidently fearing that further returns will reverse the City majority.

The election here passed off to-day very quietly. The weather was mildly rainy, which did not seem to dampen the enthusiasm of voters. It is not now supposed the storm lost the Republicans more than an equal proportion of votes, though it caused much impatience among the active workers.

The Cooper and Cary vote is not reported from many places, but it appears that this vote was very small. The suspense to-night cannot easily be described. Very few Republicans will yet give up the election, though they regard such news as has come to hand as very discouraging and the case as almost hopeless. On the other hand many feel that the worst has been heard, and that the dispatches to-morrow will present a more favorable aspect.

THE MAJORITY OVER 20,000—THE LEGISLATURE REPUBLICAN.

Special Dispatch to The New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—The returns keep coming in at 1:15 as favorably as at first, and the majority is now actually above twenty thousand. A dispatch just received from Luzerne County claims the election of Payne, Rep., Congressman to succeed Ketcham, resigned. This was the only district in which the Republicans feared the loss of a Congressman, and the triumph over the Democracy is very significant. Mahon is believed to be elected over Stengers. The Republicans undoubtedly carry both houses of the State Legislature by large majorities.

THE REPUBLICAN LEGISLATIVE TICKET ELECTED BY A HANDSOME MAJORITY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHAMBERSBURG, Penn., Nov. 8.—Fifteen election districts in Franklin County give 625 Republican majority, a Republican gain of 129 over 1875. In eleven districts, Mahan for Congress, has gained 617 over Stenger in 1874. Legislative ticket is elected handsomely.

THE ENTIRE REPUBLICAN TICKET ELECTED IN DELAWARE COUNTY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHESTER, Penn., Nov. 7.—Delaware County elects the entire Republican ticket by at least twenty-two hundred majority. Chester County reports at least three thousand Republican majority, a gain in the district of 1,200 over 1875.

NORTHAMPTON COUNTY FOR TILDEN AND A DEMOCRAT ELECTED TO CONGRESS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

EASTON, Nov. 8.—Northampton County gives Tilden 3,600 majority; Bridges, Dem., for Congress in the Tenth District, has 7,000 majority.

HON. A. HERR SMITH ELECTED TO CONGRESS IN THE NINTH DISTRICT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LANCASTER, Penn., Nov. 7.—Hon. A. Herr Smith is re-elected to Congress from Lancaster County by a majority of over seven thousand.

LEVI MARSH RE-ELECTED TO CONGRESS IN THE NINETEENTH DISTRICT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

YORK, Nov. 7.—Hon. Levi Marsh, Democrat is re-elected to Congress in the Nineteenth District.

OVER 15,000 REPUBLICAN MAJORITY IN PHILADELPHIA — REPUBLICAN GAIN OUTSIDE THE CITY.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 7.—Returns from nearly every precinct of this city indicate a Republican majority on the Presidential ticket of 15,200. The city gave a Republican majority of 17,200 last year.

The rain of this afternoon and to-night interfered materially with the working of the telegraph wires throughout the State, and returns from the election are reaching us very slowly, only a few scattering districts having been received.

Returns from twenty-four towns and townships outside of the city, principally in Chester, Berks, and Delaware Counties, show a net Republican gain of 84 on the vote for Governor in 1875.

There were no disturbances reported worth mentioning, and of the arrests made in this city some twenty odd were of persons caught in the act of violating the election laws.

Berks County gives a Democratic majority of 7,600, a gain of 431; Cumberland County gives a Democratic majority of 1,000, a gain of 300; Monroe County gives a Democratic majority of 3,600, a gain of 720; Blair County gives a Republican majority of 500, a Democratic gain of 43; Dauphin County gives a Republican majority of 1,600, a Democratic gain of 270; York County gives a Democratic majority of 3,700, a gain of 700; Lehigh County gives a Democratic majority of 2,000, a Republican gain of 100; Lancaster County gives a Republican majority of 6,000, a gain of 900.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 7.—A heavy vote was polled throughout this section, but returns come in slowly and generally show slight Republican loss. I cannot accurately estimate majority for Electors. In most election districts the county ticket is being counted first. This county gives probably 1,800 Republican majority. Kilinger, Republican, for Congress from this district, will have about two thousand majority. Beyond this nothing can be stated, save that Republicans elect their county ticket by reduced majorities. The Cooper ticket was enthusiastically supported by its few followers, and has polled about three hundred votes in the county. This is all drawn from Republicans, and will account for the loss in the county.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8—2 A. M.—In this State, Huntingdon County will probably give 500 Republican majority, a gain of 559; Schuylkill County will give a Democratic majority of 1,500, a gain of 162. In this county 900 votes were polled for the Greenback ticket. Partial returns from Bucks County indicate a Democratic majority of between 300 and 400, a slight gain; Columbia County gives a Democratic majority of 1,800, a Republican gain of 300; Bradford County gives a Republican majority of 2,000, a Democratic gain of 261; Montgomery County gives a Democratic majority of 700, a gain of 725. Twenty-five wards in this city give a net Democratic gain of 1,138. O'Neil, Rep., for Congress in the Second District, is elected by 3,690 majority.

SAM RANDALL RE-ELECTED TO CONGRESS.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 7.—Eighteen wards in this city show a net Democratic gain of 925. Randall, Dem., is re-elected to Congress from the Third District by 2,700 majority.

A REPUBLICAN GAIN OF 600 IN OCEAN COUNTY.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 7.—Ocean County, N. J., gives a Republican majority on the electoral ticket of about 250, with two towns yet to hear from; a Republican gain of 600.

DELAWARE.

TILDEN'S MAJORITY ABOUT 2,500—NEARLY A TIE VOTE IN WILMINGTON.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 7.—Newcastle County, Del., gives a Democratic majority of 700. Returns from other portions of the State indicate a Democratic majority of 2,500. Wilmington City cast nearly a tie vote.

MARYLAND.

DEMOCRATIC GAINS THROUGHOUT THE STATE.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 7.—Official returns from all the wards in this city give a Democratic majority of 10,099. In this Congressional District, comprising the First to the Ninth Wards, inclusive, Kimmell's (Dem.) majority is 5,827; Fourth District—Swann's (Dem.) majority is over 2,500. Returns from every portion of the State show Democratic gains.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 8.—Sufficient returns have been received from several counties throughout the State to show that the Democrats have elected their Congressional delegation, and carried the State on the Presidential ticket by a large majority. The following are the majorities on the Congressional districts: First District, Henry's majority, 2,800; Second, Roberts' majority, 2,400; Third, Kimmell's majority, 5,832; Fourth, Swann's majority 2,521; Fifth, Henkle's majority, 2,200; Sixth, Walsh's majority, 200. The majorities in the Third and Fourth Districts are official. Those in the others are partly estimated. At Democratic head-quarters the majority for Tilden is estimated at 18,000.

WEST VIRGINIA.

THE STATE DEMOCRATIC.

WHEELING, Nov. 7.—Ohio County gives about 600 majority for Tilden. The State will be Democratic by about the same majority as in October—probably 15,000 for Tilden.

THREE DEMOCRATIC CONGRESSMEN PROBABLY ELECTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WHEELING, Nov. 7.—The returns thus far received indicate that this district has returned Benjamin Wilson, Dem., to Congress. There is no reason to doubt the election of Martin in the Second and Kennar in the Third District, both Democrats.

VIRGINIA.

A HEAVY VOTE POLLED—THE STATE UNDOUBTEDLY DEMOCRATIC—SEVEN DEMOCRATIC CONGRESSMEN ELECTED—A LARGE MAJORITY FOR TILDEN.

NORFOLK, Nov. 7.—The election was quiet. This city gives Tilden a majority of 958; Goode, (Democrat,) for Congress, 965 majority, a Democratic gain of 574.

Elizabeth City and County gives a Republican majority of 830, and a Republican gain of 200.

LATER.—The indications are that Goode is re-elected to Congress from this district—the Second—by 1,000 majority.

RICHMOND, Nov. 7.—Rain fell all the morning, and it was cloudy and threatening during the afternoon. The bad weather did not affect the voting, however, as the vote polled in the city is as heavy as ever known. Tilden's majority in Richmond will be 1,500. Returns from the surrounding counties show Democratic gains over the vote of 1874. The only close contests for Congress are in the Second and Fourth Districts. The remaining seven districts will elect Democratic Congressmen. The returns from the Second District show that Goode, (Democrat), is gaining over the vote of 1874.

The Democratic majority in Alexandria is 270, and about the same majority for the State constitutional amendment. Gen. W. H. F. Lee is elected to the State Senate. There is no doubt of Hunter's re-election to Congress by a majority of several thousand.

The majority for Goode, Dem., for Congress, in Portsmouth, is 1,118, a Democratic gain of 965.

The reports from all the precincts in this city give Tilden a majority of 1,507. Petersburg gives Hunton, (Dem.) for Congress in the Fourth District, 219 majority; a Democratic gain of 430. He gains at all other precincts heard from, and it is believed he is elected. In the Second District Goode's (Dem.) gains are accumulating; Norfolk and Portsmouth give him a gain of 1,500. His opponent, Segar, gains slightly in some places, but Goode's election is not undoubted. If Hunton is elected in the Fourth District, the entire Congressional delegation will be Democratic. Dispatches from almost every section of the State indicate that Tilden is gaining steadily. He will carry the State by a largely increased majority over any previous election.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

A REPUBLICAN MAJORITY OF TEN TO TWENTY THOUSAND—FOUR REPUBLICAN CONGRESSMEN ELECTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBIA, Nov. 7.—Owing to the presence of United States troops, the election passed off quietly in South Carolina. One or two slight disturbances occurred, but no serious riot is reported. The Republicans have carried the State for Hayes and Wheeler by at least ten thousand majority; the State Committee claims from fifteen to twenty thousand. The majority for the State ticket will not be over twelve thousand. The Republicans have probably elected four out of the five Congressmen, a loss of one.

CHARLESTON, Nov. 1.—Unofficial returns from various sections of the State show large Democratic gains everywhere, as compared with the vote of two years ago. No Republican gain is reported anywhere. The Democratic Committee are jubilant. The Republicans are unwilling to grant that Chamberlain's majority of 1874 is overcome.

The Democrats claim the State by 4,000 majority. Barnwell, Aiken, Edgefield, and Abbeyville Counties, heretofore Republican, are claimed by the Democrats.

Unofficial, but trustworthy, returns from about half of the State show a Democratic gain of over 12,000 as compared with the vote of 1874, when Chamberlain had 10,000 majority over Green, (fusion.) The Republicans claim that Charleston County will give a heavy Republican gain to offset the Democratic gains. The result hangs upon coast counties not accessible by wire.

LATER.—The Democrats have certainly elected Evins in the Fourth and Aiken in the Third District to Congress. The State is probably carried for Hampton and Tilden by a small majority, but both sides still claim it. Charleston City gives Hampton a majority, and the result in the State depends upon the vote of Charleston County, which cannot be ascertained until to-morrow morning.

AUGUSTA, Nov. 8.—12:20 A. M.—The Republicans claim South Carolina by 15,000 majority. The Democrats claim returns enough to insure the election of Evins and Aiken, Dems., in place of Wallace and Carpenter, Reps.

CHARLESTON, Nov. 8—2:15 A. M.—Returns to this hour give Hampton 7,000 majority. This does not include Charleston County, which will probably give Chamberlain 5,000 or 6,000 majority. The election will be very close, with the chances in favor of Hayes for President and Hampton for Governor.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBIA, Nov. 7.—The State is safe for Hayes and Chamberlain by from 15,000 to 18,000 majority. Republican Congressmen are elected in the First, Second, and Third Districts. Returns from the Third and Fourth Districts come in slowly.

ROBERT B. ELLIOTT, President Republican State Executive Committee.

NORTH CAROLINA.

SMALL DEMOCRATIC GAINS REPORTED—THE STATE CLAIMED BY THE DEMOCRATS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

RALEIGH, Nov. 7.—The Patriot's returns from Wake, Craver, Mecklenburg, Rowan, Rockingham, Anson, Richmond, Lenoir, Iredell, Carteret, and Cleaveland Counties show a Democratic gain of 1,000.

Wayne, Catarrns and Guilford Counties give a Democratic gain of 850. If the returns received are true the Democrats have carried the State by not less than 5,000.

Later.—The Patriot's returns, from Democratic sources, from Orange, Guildford, Cabarrus, Carteret, Richmond, Wayne, Wilson, Wake, Mecklenburg, Rowan, Lincoln, Rockingham, Anson, and Iredell show a Democratic gain of 4,000. This ratio, if kept up, will make the Democratic majority not less than 10,000.

WILMINGTON, Nov. 7.—The election closed without the slightest disturbance. The ticket is very long.

The Second Ward of this city gives a Democratic gain of 103, and the Fifth Ward a Republican gain of 6.

Lilesville gives a corrected Democratic gain of 15, and Lawrenburg, Richmond County, a Democratic gain of 34.

The returns thus far received show an almost universal Democratic gain. Wilson County gives a Democratic gain of 400, and the indications all favor a decided Democratic majority in the State.

LATER.—The returns continue favorable to the Democrats. The Republicans claim the State by a small majority, but admit that it will be very close. The Democrats claim the State by 5,000 to 10,000 majority. The Star estimates the Democratic majority at 4,500 to 6,000.

The latest returns continue to show Democratic gains. The State is certainly Democratic by a large majority.

RALEIGH, Nov. 7.—Raleigh city and township give a Democratic gain of 100. All points in the State heard from give Democratic gains. Mecklenburg County, the home of Vance, gives a Democratic gain of 300.

The Republicans gain 300 in New-Hanover and Pender Counties.

RALEIGH, Nov. 7.—LATER.—Heavy Democratic gains are reported from all quarters from which returns have been received. There is no longer any doubt that the Democrats have carried the State. The Republicans concede it. The Democrats probably elect seven out of eight Congressmen. In the small County of Cleaveland the Democratic gain is 648.

GEORGIA.

HEAVY DEMOCRATIC MAJORITIES—ONE REPUBLICAN CONGRESSMAN PROBABLY ELECTED.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 7.—Muscogee County gives Tilden 1,400 majority; also a like number to Harris (Dem.) for Congress. This district goes Democratic by a heavy majority.

AUGUSTA, Nov. 7.—The returns seem to indicate the election of an unbroken Democratic delegation to Congress. There has been a large vote polled in the State. Every county in the Eighth District has gone Democratic. Richmond County gives over 3,000 Democratic majority.

SAVANNAH, Nov. 7.—Chatham County gives Hartridge, for Congress, over 600 majority; Tilden's majority, 800. Seven hundred negroes voted the straight Democratic ticket. Everything passed off quietly, although there was a crowd of negroes in the town all day.

ATLANTA, Nov. 7.—This State gives a majority of from fifty to sixty thousand for Tilden. The Congressional ticket is re-elected throughout the State.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ATLANTA, Nov. 7.—Georgia gives Tilden from 40,000 to 60,000 majority. Candler, Dem., is elected in the Fifth District by 2,000 to 3,000 majority over Markham. Whitely, Rep., is probably elected in the Second. The rest of the districts have gone Democratic. Felton, Ind., is elected in the Seventh by from 1,000 to 2,000.

D. D. SNYDER, Chairman Congressional Committee.

FLORIDA.

THE STATE IN DOUBT.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Nov. 8.—A dispatch from Lake City, Florida, says returns from sixteen counties in Florida, Republican strongholds, show a net Democratic gain over the vote of 1874 of 544. Columbia and Monroe Counties, formerly Republican, elect Democratic tickets. Finley, Dem., for Congress, is probably re-elected. The Democrats claim the State by a small majority.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Nov. 7.—There is nothing further from the Florida election. It will be close. Both sides claim the State.

ALABAMA.

SEVEN DEMOCRATIC CONGRESSMEN PROBABLY ELECTED—TILDEN'S MAJORITY IN THE STATE ABOUT 25,000.

MONTGOMERY, Nov. 7.—The election was quiet throughout the State as far as heard from. Hayes' majority in this city will be 1,600. The few boxes heard from indicate a large Democratic majority in the State. It is safe to say that seven Democratic Congressmen have been elected.

MOBILE, Nov. 7.—The indications are that Bromberg (Ind. Dem.) has carried the county by 3,500 majority. Tilden and Hendricks' majority will equal, if it does not exceed, Bromberg's. Everything is quiet.

Returns show Democratic majorities from all directions, indicating at least 25,000 majority in the State. Seven Democratic Congressmen are certainly elected. In the Fourth District, Haralson, the present colored member, is opposed by Rapier, (colored,) an ex-member, who is supported by Senator Spencer and all the Federal officials. Shelby, Dem., is making gains, but not enough is known to warrant an estimate.

MISSISSIPPI.

ALL THE DEMOCRATIC CONGRESSMEN ELECTED—A DEMOCRATIC MAJORITY ON THE STATE TICKET.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 7.—Private news from all over Mississippi, from Superintendents to Mr. Van Horne, Division Superintendent of the Western Union Telegraph Company, reports the election of five and perhaps more Democratic Congressmen, and says that the State is Democratic by over 30,000.

JACKSON, Nov. 7.—Returns from various points indicate that the State has gone Democratic by a large majority over the last election. Five Congressmen are certainly elected by the Democrats, with a strong probability that they elect the sixth. The election passed off very peaceably, no disturbances being reported from any section. The Democratic majority in the State will probably reach 50,000.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

JACKSON, Nov. 7.—The Democrats, in the sham election in this State, will count a majority of from forty to fifty thousand, with all the Congressmen.

H. R. WARE, Chairman Republican State Committee.

LOUISIANA.

SIX TO EIGHT THOUSAND REPUBLICAN MAJORITY IN THE STATE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 7.—The State has probably gone Republican by from six to eight thousand. Smith, Rep., in the Fourth District, is undoubtedly elected.

DUMONT, Chairman Republican State Committee.

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 7.—The Democratic State Central Committee have received dispatches claiming 1,500 majority in Claiborne Parish, and 1,000 majority in Lincoln Parish—a net gain of over 1,300 in the two parishes.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 7.—Information from Western Union Telegraph agents states that Louisiana has gone Democratic, the majority in New-Orleans being 10,000.

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 7.—The returns are meagre—not sufficient to make accurate estimates. The Democrats claim the State by 20,000, and have dispatches from several voting precincts of the interior, showing heavy Democratic gains on the election of 1874. The Democrats claim this city by 12,000. The Republican Committee estimate their majority outside of the city at from 18,000 to 21,000, and concede the city to the Democrats by 8,000 to 10,000. The best-informed moderate Republicans claim the State by not more than 4,000.

The total vote of the City of Louisville was 17,321, of which Hayes has 5,158 and Tilden 12,163, a Democratic majority of 7,005 and a Democratic gain of 3,500. The State probably goes Democratic by over sixty thousand. The Democrats elect Congressmen in every district, they being as follows: First, Andrew Boone; Second, James McKenzie; Third, John W. Caldwell; Fourth, J. Proctor Knott; Fifth, Albert S. Willis; Sixth, John G. Carlisle; Seventh, J. C. S. Blackburn; Eighth, W. J. Durham; Ninth, Thomas Turner; Tenth, John B. Clarke.

TEXAS.

LITTLE INTEREST MANIFESTED—NO RETURNS RECEIVED.

GALVESTON, Nov. 7.—The election is proceeding quietly and without excitement at all the polling places heard from. Special dispatches from the interior, state that very little interest is taken in the contest and a small vote is being polled. There is no question as to the result in the State at large and in the Congressional Districts except this—the Fifth. In this district the probabilities favor Giddings, the regular Democratic candidate, against Jones, Independent Democrat.

The Democratic majority in Texas will probably exceed 75,000. Giddings, regular Dem., has 1,903 majority in this city, which probably secures his election and returns a full Democratic delegation to Congress from this State.

TENNESSEE.

A HEAVY VOTE POLLED—THE DEMOCRATS SUCCESSFUL.

MEMPHIS, Nov. 7.—The election here to-day was unusually quiet. A very heavy vote was polled, that of the city being over ten thousand, or 1,000 over any former vote. It is believed that Thomas, the independent Democratic candidate for Governor, has carried the county by over fifteen hundred, and that the Republicans have elected their Legislative ticket. The Democrats generally concede the election of Randolph (Rep.) for Congress over Young, (Dem.,) the present incumbent. The official vote will not be known until a late hour.

NASHVILLE, Nov. 7.—The election passed off quietly in all parts of the State. There is no doubt of the election of Porter, Dem., for Governor, and certainly eight out of ten Congressmen by the Democrats.

MEMPHIS, Nov. 7, 11 P. M.—The vote of this city is not yet counted and probably will not be until a very late hour. The Democrats now claim that Young, Dem., is re-elected to Congress by a small majority. Thomas, Independent candidate for Governor, has undoubtedly carried the County by a heavy majority, and also Fayette County by 300 to 400 majority.

ARKANSAS.

LARGE REPUBLICAN GAINS REPORTED—THE DEMOCRATIC STATE TICKET PROBABLY ELECTED BY A REDUCED MAJORITY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 7.—The election has passed off quietly. This city and county give 1,000 Republican majority, a gain of 1,200 over the September election. There are few returns from the State, but the Democrats have probably carried it by a reduced majority. McClure, Republican, claims his election in the Third District.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 7.—The returns from five wards and one township are as follows: Democratic, 992; Republican, 954. For Congress, Stuart, (Dem.,) 672; Cravens, (Dem.,) 301; McClure, (Rep.,) 905; Rice, (Greenback,) 78; Dell, (Rep.,) none; Ward, (Rep.,) yet to hear from. The election was quiet and orderly.

KENTUCKY.

A LARGE MAJORITY FOR TILDEN—ALL THE CONGRESSMEN DEMOCRATS.

LEXINGTON, Nov. 7.—The official vote of this city gives Tilden 1,579; Hayes, 2,172—a Democratic gain of 454 on the vote of 1872; Blackburn, Dem., for Congress, 1,594; Shackelford, Rep., 1,895.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 7.—Tilden's majority in Kentucky is estimated at over 66,000.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 7.—Returns indicate a majority of 4,500 in this State for Tilden and a solid Democratic delegation to Congress.

R. M. KELLY, Chairman Republican State Committee.

ILLINOIS.

THE DAY IN CHICAGO—A SPECIMEN DEMOCRATIC TRICK—ONE REPUBLICAN AND TWO DEMOCRATIC CONGRESSMEN ELECTED IN THE CITY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Nov. 7.—Although an undercurrent of intense excitement pervades the City, the election passed off very quietly, and up to a late hour to-night, not a single serious fracas was reported. Both parties felt that they were playing for big stakes, and neither felt certain enough of victory to do much crowing, preferring to defer that sort of thing until after the ballots were counted. There was manifestly little electioneering at the polls. The Greenbackers seemed to be entirely out of the field, the working men fared no better, and other actions that made some stir during the campaign were not even represented. During the early part of the day the voting proceeded at a snail's pace, and precincts that expected to cast from 1,000 to 1,200 votes could show only a beggarly 250 or 300 at noon. Toward night the business progressed more rapidly, and when the polls closed at 7 o'clock there were few desiring to vote who had not had an opportunity to do so. A variety of dodges were resorted to here, one of which was the substitution of Democratic for Republican electors on the regular Republican ticket, a trick which has been attributed to the Republicans who, to save Cullom for Governor, were charged with a willingness to sacrifice all else. Be this as it may, this ticket was voted to some extent in the strongest Republican precincts of the City. At 11 o'clock to-night the returns had been received from only sixteen precincts of the city, and these gave a total vote of 2,093 for Tilden, and 1,286 for Hayes. Nothing definite is known as to the Congressional vote, but the indications are, at this writing, that Aldrich, Republican, in the First District, and Harrison and Lemoyne, Democratic, in the Second and Third Districts, are elected, together with Luther Lafiin Mills, Republican, as State's Attorney, and Charles Kern, Democrat, as Sheriff. Returns from the State are slow coming in, but many small towns show Republican gains.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8—1:40 A. M.—Thirty-five towns and precincts in Cook County give Tilden 4,346 majority.

GENERAL REPUBLICAN GAINS REPORTED—A DEMOCRATIC GAIN IN "EGYPT"—A LARGELY INCREASED VOTE.

CHICAGO, Nov. 7.—Returns from twenty townships in Illinois show general Republican majorities. The vote for Cooper in some of the interior counties is nearly equal to that of Tilden.

Cairo gives 56 majority for Tilden, a Democratic gain of 230.

Returns from twenty towns in Illinois give Hayes, 4,339; Tilden, 3,484; Cooper, 84: Republican gain over the vote for Governor in 1872 of 1,234; Democratic, 1,328, being net Democratic gain of 94.

Eleven precincts in Chicago, and thirty-nine towns in the interior of the State, give Hayes 13,290; Tilden, 10,397—a small Democratic gain over the vote for Governor in 1872, when the State went Republican by over 50,000. There is no doubt of a large Republican majority in the State.

Returns from eighty-two towns in Illinois give Hayes 23,081; Tilden 18,501, Cooper 321. Net Democratic gain, 397.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Nov. 7—11:20 P. M.—Partial returns from the wards in this city indicate that Tilden has a small majority. Brentano, the German Republican candidate for Congress in the Third District, is defeated by Le Moyne. The German wards go for the latter. Aldrich, in the First, is probably elected. The State is probably Republican by 20,000 majority. It now looks as if Lathrop was elected in the Fourth District in spite of the bolt of Hurlbert.

A DEMOCRATIC MAJORITY OF 3,000 IN CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8—1:25 A.M.—Partial returns from this City indicate a Democratic majority of about 3,000. Returns from 100 towns and precincts, not including the City of Chicago, give Hayes 25,075, Tilden 17,988. In 1872 the same places gave Grant 19,402; Greeley 12,176.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—Returns from 39 precincts, representing 17 wards, give Hayes 8,849, Tilden 13,756. The Democrats claim Tilden will carry Cooke County by nearly 10,000 majority. It is considered certain that Aldrich, Rep., is elected over Hoxie, Dem., in the First District; that LeMoyne, Dem., is elected over Brentano, Rep., in the Third District, and that the vote in the Second District will be very close between Davis, Rep., and Harrison, Dem.

WISCONSIN.

LARGE REPUBLICAN GAINS INDICATE THE STATE SURE FOR HAYES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 7.—Returns are favorable to a large Republican majority in Wisconsin. Accurate returns from fifty towns show Hayes to have a majority of 1,283—a Republican gain of 947 over the vote of 1872. This city shows large Republican gains over the vote of 1872. As far as heard from, there are Republican gains in many doubtful Congressional districts.

10:55 P. M.—Fourteen precincts of Milwaukee give Tilden 781 majority. This is a Republican gain of 1,500.

Returns from fifty towns and wards in Wisconsin give Hayes a majority of 1,300, a Republican gain of 947.

11:52 P. M.—One hundred and twenty-three towns, largely in Democratic counties, give a net Republican gain of 907, with the large Republican towns still to hear from. Milwaukee Republican gains are not included in the above.

THE STATE FOR HAYES AND WHEELER.

MADISON, Nov. 8.—Returns indicate that Wisconsin has voted for Hayes and Wheeler.

E. W. KEYES, Chairman Republican State Committee.

IOWA.

PARTIAL RETURNS FROM SEVENTEEN COUNTIES—A NET REPUBLICAN GAIN INDICATED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

DESMOINES, Ia., Nov. 7.—Dexter Precinct, in Dallas County, gives Hayes 174 over Tilden, a gain of 54; Mitchellville Precinct, in Polk County, gives Hayes 93 majority, a gain of 1; Columbia, in Wapello County, gives Hayes 50 majority, a gain of 2. Sampson, Rep., for Congress, has 100 majority.

CHICAGO, Nov. 7.—Returns have been received from fifteen townships in Iowa, showing heavy Republican majorities.

Partial returns from seventeen counties in Iowa show a Republican gain of 714; a Democratic gain of 52; net Republican gain, 662.

DES MOINES, Nov. 8—12:02 A. M.—Eight precincts in central Iowa gives Hayes 1,386 majority. The same places gave Gov. Kirkwood, last year, 1768 Leffler 698—a Republican gain of 316.

CHICAGO, Nov. 7—11 P. M.—Partial returns from fifty-three towns in thirty-six counties in Iowa give Republican gains of 2,119 and Democratic gains of 149, showing a net Republican gain of 1,970 over the vote of 1875 for Governor.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

OSKALOOSA, Nov. 8.—The returns are meagre, but indicates a Republican majority of over forty thousand. All the Congressional districts have elected Republicans.

THE RETURNS FROM THE CITY OF DES MOINES—SEVERAL COUNTIES HEARD FROM.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

DES MOINES, Nov. 7.—Seventeen precincts give Hayes 3,359 majority. In 1875 Kirkwood had 4,492, Leffler 2,067, a majority for the former of 2,275. This shows a Republican gain of 10,840. Mapella County gives Republican majority of 150, gain 120; Jasper County, 103 majority, a gain of 400; Polk County, 185 majority, a gain of 900. The Republican majority in the State is over 50,000. Sampson, Cummins and Oliver, Republicans, are elected to Congress. The indications from the Second District favor the election of Hiram Price, Rep. Nothing has been received here from the other districts.

ALL THE CONGRESSMEN ELECTED ARE REPUBLICAN.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

DES MOINES, Nov. 7.—The few returns received from Iowa all indicate increased Republican majorities, and the election of all the Republican Congressmen. The majority on the State ticket is estimated at 40,000 to 45,000. Peter Cooper's vote is heavier than had been anticipated, and will probably reach 10,000.

NEBRASKA.

A HEAVY VOTE POLLED—A QUIET ELECTION.

OMAHA, Nov. 7.—The election passed off quietly. A heavy vote was polled in this city. No returns are yet in from the State. Both parties claim Douglass County. Local factions have caused much scratching. The straight tickets so far counted in this city show a Democratic plurality.

Partial returns from Colfax County show 58 Republican majority; the same from Buffalo County, 144 Republican majority; Dodge County, 110 Republican majority. Nemaha County is claimed by the Democrats. Saline County, Republican by about 400. Democrats claim Platte County by 150 majority. No official returns have been received.

MISSOURI.

NO RETURNS FROM THE INTERIOR.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 7.—The returns so far are very scattering, and give but little information. Ten precincts give Tilden 2,118, Hayes 1,335. Six precincts give Phelps, Dem., for Governor, 1,005; Finkelnburg, Rep., 722. No returns from the interior yet.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

ROLLA, Nov. 7.—Phelps County gives 350 Democratic majority on the national and State ticket. Bland, Dem., is probably elected to Congress by an increased majority.

A REPUBLICAN GAIN OF ONE CONGRESSMAN—THE VOTE IN ST. LOUIS.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 8—1 A. M.—The returns are being counted so slowly that scarcely an approximate result of the election in this city can be given at this writing. About one-half of the precincts in this city give Thomas, Rep., for Sheriff, 11,073; Brown, Dem., 10,098. Thomas has run somewhat ahead of his ticket. His vote, therefore, does not indicate a Republican victory. The county ticket will probably be divided, but the indications are that the Democrats will get much the larger part of it. In the First Congressional District Anthony Illuer, Rep., has no doubt beaten E. C. Kerr, the present incumbent. In the Second District the indications are that Erastus Wells, Dem., the present member, has defeated A. W. Slayback and Nathan Cole. The Third District is doubtful at this writing, but the chances are in favor of R. G. Frost, Dem. Tilden's majority in the city cannot be stated now, but it will probably reach 2,000.

A GAIN OF FOUR REPUBLICAN CONGRESSMEN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 8.—The First, Second, Sixth, and Tenth Districts, have elected Republican Congressmen.

A GAIN OF TWO REPUBLICAN CONGRESSMEN ADMITTED.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 7, 12 P. M.—The Democrats claim this county by 2,000 majority, but admit a gain of two Republican Congressmen. Newtown County gives probably 175 Democratic majority; Pike County gives 400 Democratic majority; and Rain County 1,200 Democratic majority. Pettis County will give 350 Democratic majority, Marion County 500 Democratic, and Lincoln County 1,500 Democratic. Bolinger County has gone Democratic, except for member of the Legislature. There is a large Republican gain in this latter county. Twenty-three townships outside these counties, and scattered over a large portion of the State, give Tilden a majority of 1,345.

INDIANA.

DEMOCRATIC GAINS REPORTED FROM EIGHTY TOWNS.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 7.—Returns from twenty townships give Tilden 3,044, and Hayes 2,500. The same places in October gave Williams 3,004, and Harrison 2,641. This is a net Democratic gain of 181.

At 8:10 P. M. the returns from forty townships give Tilden 5,809, and Hayes 5,801. The same places in October gave Williams 5,789, and Harrison 5,898.

In sixty-two townships in thirty-nine counties heard from the Democratic net gain is 50. The indications now are that Tilden's majority will be between 7,000 and 10,000 in the State.

Returns from eighty townships give Tilden 13,376, Hayes 13,433. The same places in October gave Williams 13,325, and Harrison 13,702.

TERRE HAUTE, Nov. 7.—Five wards and townships in this county show a Republican gain over October of 29.

Returns from 100 townships in 54 counties give a net Democratic gain of 245.

10:30 P. M.—Returns from 180 townships give Tilden 35,949, Hayes, 35,334. The same places in October gave Williams 35,141, Harrison, 35,193, a net Democratic gain of 667.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 7.—Returns from 220 townships give Tilden 46,316, Hayes 45,647. The same places in October gave Williams 45,486, Harrison 45,319, a net Democratic gain of 502.

A QUIET ELECTION, AND A FULL VOTE POLLED—THE STATE CONCEDED TO THE DEMOCRATS BY AN INCREASED MAJORITY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 7.—The election passed off very quietly in this city to-day, and a vote only 118 less than in October was polled, which was over two thousand greater than any ever before cast. The day at first was unpleasant and it was feared that a small vote would be got out, but in the afternoon the clans rallied, and a full vote was secured. It will be impossible to-night to give the exact result, but indications are that this county will give from 2,000 to 2,100 majority for Hayes, an increase of 500 over last month. Throughout the State, so far as returns have been received, the indications show but little change from the October vote. Harrison and Williams polled the full strength of their respective parties, and the returns thus far received show that the vote for Hayes and Tilden varies but little from that. The probabilities are that the Democracy will gain from fifteen hundred to two thousand in the State. The Republicans concede the State.

KANSAS.

THE STATE CERTAIN FOR GOV. HAYES.

TOPEKA, Nov. 7.—Hayes' majority, in this, Shawnee County, is about 1,200. Anthony, Rep., for Governor, 1,000 majority.

LAWRENCE, Nov. 7.—No city or county returns are yet completed. There are indications, however, of sweeping Republican victories on the county, State, and National tickets. Haskell, Rep., for Congress in the Second District, has a splendid majority. A full vote was polled, and all was quiet.

A MAJORITY OF 25,000 FOR HAYES—A GAIN OF ONE CONGRESSMAN.

TOPEKA, Nov. 7.—Kansas gives Hayes a majority of 25,000. The whole State and Congressional ticket is elected, being a gain of one Republican Congressman in the place of Goodin, Dem., the present incumbent.

OHIO.

THE STATE CLAIMED BY THE REPUBLICANS BY 15,000 TO 18,000 MAJORITY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 7.—Scattering returns from a number of points in the interior of the State indicate Republican gains. The count in the city is not finished in a single precinct.

Reports from forty-three precincts in the city and county give a Republican gain of 488. This indicates that the Republicans will carry the county by over six hundred majority. From nearly all interior points, also, we have Republican gains. The State is now claimed for Hayes by 18,000 majority. It cannot fall below 15,000.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 7.—The election passed off very quietly, no disorder of any importance occurring. The weather was cool and cloudy. The vote was somewhat lighter in most wards than was polled in October.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 7.—At this hour there is a tremendous crowd of people in City Hall, where the Republicans are receiving returns. The first returns were received from several wards in this city, showing, with one exception, small Republican gains over the recent October elections. The first returns from different points in the State also showed Republican gains, which encouraged the Republicans to believe they had carried the State by from 20,000 to 25,000 majority; but an hour later the general run of the returns showed a considerable sprinkling of Democratic gains, so much so, in fact that 122 precincts showed a net Democratic gain of 127 over the vote for Governor last year. The committee compare the majorities with those of 1875, because the returns of last October election have not yet been printed by townships and wards.

The Democratic gains had a somewhat dampening effect on the crowd, and some parties figuring on the reports almost despaired of carrying the State by a majority equal to that secured by Hayes last year, but a private telegram from Cincinnati showing Republican gains, and announcing that Hamilton County had probably been carried for Hayes, restored the drooping spirits of everybody, especially when, a moment later, it was ascertained that 192 precincts showed a net Republican gain of 406 over Hayes' majority in 1875.

1:57 P. M.—The Ohio returns grow less cheerful. At this hour reports from 448 voting places have been received, giving a net Democratic gain of 266 over last year when the Republican majority was 5,500.

MIDNIGHT.—The State Executive Committee now estimate the Republican majority at about the same as last month, 6,600. The returns from other States indicating a strong probability of Tilden's election, has had the effect of thinning the crowd at the City Hall amazingly.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 7.—Returns from 308 wards, townships, and precincts in about sixty counties, including about half of Cleveland and one-third of Cincinnati, show Republican gains to be 4,407; Democratic, 4,566; net Democratic gain of 159, as compared with Gubernatorial election in 1875.

CLEVELAND, Nov. 7.—The election here to-day was quiet. There was no disturbance of any kind in the city. The vote is about the same in the aggregate as that of October. Seven wards and seven townships in Cuyahoga County give Hayes a majority of 2,872, a slight increase over the majority for Republican State ticket in October. Scattering returns from towns in Northern Ohio give slight but uniform Republican gains over the vote of last month.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 7.—Returns from 448 townships and voting precincts in Ohio, covering 65 counties, show a net Democratic gain of 266, as compared with the Gubernatorial vote of 1875.

At 11:30 P. M. returns from 508 townships and wards in Ohio show a net Republican gain of 117 over 1875, when Gov. Hayes had a majority of 554.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 7.—The Democrats carry Hamilton County by about 500. This is a Republican gain of over 300.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 7.—Three hundred and twenty townships and precincts give Hayes a net gain of 117 over last year. This includes the greater part of Cincinnati and part of Cleveland, where the Republicans did vastly better in 1875 than in 1876. Hayes has a majority of about 1,000 in Hamilton County. The State is undoubtedly Republican by 10,000 majority.

MICHIGAN.

A DEMOCRATIC GAIN OVER 1872 REPORTED.

DETROIT, Nov. 7.—Returns from thirty-two townships give Hayes a net Republican majority of 831, a Democratic gain of 1,590, as compared with the vote of 1872. The same towns give Croswell (Rep.) for Governor, a net majority of 463.

DETROIT, Nov. 7.—Eighteen precincts in this city show a net Democratic majority of 1,917, a Democratic gain of about 1,500 in Detroit. Returns from fifty-seven townships give Hayes a net majority of 2,154, a net Democratic gain of 2,612 as compared with 1872. The same towns give Crosswell, Rep., for Governor, a net majority of 348.

Returns from seventy-eight townships and precincts give Hayes a net Republican majority of 2,669, a Democratic gain of 3,652, as compared with the vote of 1872. The same towns gave Cresswell, (Rep.,) for Governor, a net majority of 809.

Returns from 105 townships give Hayes a net majority of 3,085; a Democratic gain of 4,702 as compared with the vote of 1872. The same towns gave Crosswell, Rep., for Governor, a net majority of 1,218.

HAYES' MAJORITY FROM 10,000 TO 15,000—A REPUBLICAN GAIN OF ONE CONGRESSMAN—THE LEGISLATURE REPUBLICAN IN BOTH BRANCHES.

Special Dispatch to The New-York Times.

DETROIT, Nov. 8—3 A. M.—Up to 1 A. M. but few precincts in this city have been canvassed, and the result is still utterly uncertain. Such returns as have been received indicate Williams' re-election to Congress, but by a largely reduced majority. Returns from the State at large indicate the election of the entire Republican State and National tickets by ten to fifteen thousand majority, except in cases of candidates running against men on both the Democratic and Greenback tickets, when the majorities will be somewhat smaller.

The Legislature is undoubtedly Republican by fair majorities in both branches, and will elect a Republican United States Senator.

The Republicans have carried, from present appearances, seven Congressional districts, a gain of one. They may be classified as follows: First, Williams, Dem.; Second, Willets, Rep.; Third, McGowan, Rep.; Fourth, Chamberlain, Dem.; Fifth, Stone, Rep.; Sixth, Brewer, Rep.; Seventh, Conger, Rep.; Eighth, Ellsworth, Rep.; Ninth, Hubbell, Rep.

The result in this county on the county officers will not be known until to-morrow, but part of the ticket is certainly carried by the Republicans.

MINNESOTA.

A HEAVY REPUBLICAN MAJORITY ON THE GENERAL STATE TICKET—THE CONGRESSIONAL RETURNS.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 7.—Returns received to 9 o'clock indicate a full vote and a heavy Republican majority on the general ticket. Dunnell, (Rep.) in First Congressional District will be elected; Stewart, (Rep.) in the Third, and probably Strait (Rep.) in the Second.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 8—1:17 A. M.—This State gives over 15,000 majority for Hayes and Wheeler. Stewart, Dunnell, and probably Strait, are elected to Congress.

R. N. McLAREN, Secretary State Committee.

ALL THREE REPUBLICAN CONGRESSMEN ELECTED.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 7.—St. Paul, nearly complete, gives a majority of nearly 1,200 for Tilden, and about the same for McNair, Dem., for Congress. Scattering, but very incomplete, returns from all parts of the State indicate the election of all three Republican Congressmen. Strait's (Rep.) majority in the Second District will be small, but his election is conceded by the Democrats.

Eleven Precincts of Minneapolis give Hayes 3,301, Tilden 2,703; Stewart, Rep., for Congress, 2,499; McNair, Dem., 2,575.

CALIFORNIA.

INDICATIONS THAT THE STATE HAS GONE REPUBLICAN—A GAIN OF AT LEAST ONE CONGRESSMAN CONCEDED.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 7.—The election in the city and State passed off very quiet. A heavy vote was cast. Forty-two thousand ballots were polled in this city. The result here cannot be known before morning. Both parties claim the city, but the defeat of Piper, Dem., for Congress from this district, is conceded. Partial returns from the interior show Republican gains almost everywhere. There is no question that Page, Rep., will be elected in the Second District. In the Third and Fourth Districts the results are more doubtful, and cannot safely be predicted. From present advices at the Republican State Central Committee room, the feeling is strong that the Republicans have carried the State by a fair majority, and press dispatches seem to indicate that fact. The returns from the large towns are coming in slowly.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 7.—The State will probably give a Republican majority of 5,000.

OREGON.

A REPUBLICAN VICTORY OF 500 MAJORITY.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 7.—A Portland dispatch says the Republicans have Oregon by 500 majority.

NEVADA.

DEMOCRATIC GAINS REPORTED FROM ONE TOWN.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 7.—Nothing has been received from Oregon or Nevada, except that Democratic gains are reported in Virginia City.

WYOMING TERRITORY.

A REPUBLICAN DELEGATE ELECTED BY 700 MAJORITY.

CHEYENNE, Nov. 8—2:48 A. M.—Returns from all but a few precincts indicate the election of W. W. Corlett, Rep., for Delegate by 700 majority.

NEW-JERSEY'S CONGRESSMEN.

THE STATE CLAIMED FOR TILDEN BY FIFTEEN THOUSAND MAJORITY—A REPUBLICAN GAIN OF ONE CONGRESSMAN.

New-Jersey has gone Democratic by probably 15,000 majority. The Republicans elect three out of the seven Congressmen, a gain of one. The State Senate is yet in doubt, but is probably Republican. The House of Assembly is Democratic by seven or eight majority, and will probably elect nine Democratic United States Senators.

CONGRESSMEN ELECTED.

2.—Dr. Heward Pugh, Rep.
3.—Miles Ross, Dem.
4.—Alvah A. Clark, Dem.

THE VATICAN PRISONER.

FIRST APPEARANCE OF THE POPE IN SIX YEARS.

A MASS MEETING IN THE CHURCH OF ST. PETER—THE GREATEST CURIOSITY OF ROME—HIS HOLINESS' RECEPTION OF SPANISH PILGRIMS—PIO NINO'S PERSONAL APPEARANCE—THE PROMOTION OF CATHOLIC INTERESTS.

ROME, Thursday, Oct. 19, 1876.

The Pope has taken a step this week which will help to break the illusion of his being a prisoner, if any such illusion still exists. The Holy Father has presided at a mass meeting of his friends in the Church of St. Peter, and has given a great many of us an opportunity to have another sight of him and to hear his voice, after having been denied that pleasure for more than six years. Some have estimated the number present as high as eight thousand, but I do not think the number of tickets distributed was more than half that. For ten days past the trains have come laden with crowds from the country of Loyola and St. Dominic, each squad ranging from three to eight or nine hundred. As one of the first objects of these visitors is to see the Pope and have their beads blessed by him, it soon became a question where, except in the public square, it would be possible to give audience to so large a company. No room in the Vatican is of a capacity equal to such numbers, and by general consent St. Peter's was pitched upon. The fiction runs that Pius IX. has not been in the church since the new public has had control of Rome. It is certain that the Pontiff has never appeared before an audience there, although it is probable that he has wandered about over its marble pavement when the building has been closed. At any rate, a novelty was to be offered, both as to the numbers and the place, and many, not of the company of the "pilgrims," asked the privilege of joining the crowd. The arm of the cross on the side of the sacristy, or on the left side as one faces the high altar, was the part of the building chosen for the meeting. Monday was the day, and by 12 o'clock the throng that for two hours had been filing into the Basilica by the two entrances—that by the corridor on the side of the Vatican for the Spaniards, and the passage on the side of the Palace of the Inquisition for the others admitted—had arrived at its full measure. Full ninety of every hundred present had never yet seen the Pope, who, if he was not before, is now certainly, the greatest curiosity of Rome. There was a hush of expectation, but not of long continuance, and the curiosity of the Spaniards had it's satisfaction. The Pope descended from the Vatican by the private staircase which leads to the Chapel of the Holy Sacrament. Here he mounted the sedia gestatoria, preceded, surrounded, and followed by a large number of the Papal Court, including most of the Cardinals having residence in Rome, by the Noble and Palatine Guards, and the Swiss in their fantastical costumes of ceremony. As the cortège moved across the church nearly the whole of the vast company fell upon their knees. Arrived at the end of the transept, his Holiness left the platform upon which he was carried, and mounted the throne which had been set up before the altar. The Archbishop of Granada read an address of some length, to which the Pope replied, also in Spanish, a language some knowledge of which he acquired when a missionary in one of the States of Spanish America. It was a convenience and a great gratification to the Spaniards to be addressed in their own tongue, as but few of them could understand Italian, French, or Latin, the other languages which the Pope speaks. After the speech was imparted the apostolic benediction. The voice of the Pontiff, at the beginning of his discourse, was clear and vigorous, but fell off to a lower tone before the end. The Pope has lost color since we last saw him, and begins to give signs that his forces are running out. Still, his aspect is such as to encourage his friends to hope that his life may for some time yet be prolonged. His health is cared for in every way; he has all the sympathy that can be reasonably asked, and the riches of this world roll into the Vatican in a golden tide. These visits of devotees from all parts of the world are a great consolation to Pio Nono, and he expresses it very cordially in all his discourses. It is said that other caravans of pilgrims are organizing in Germany and other countries, and we shall have opportunity to witness succeeding exhibitions similar to this. This horde of four or five thousand Spaniards is made up of all sorts of social elements—"black spirits and white, blue spirits and gray"—or, to use an old ditty with a little license, "Some in rags, some in tags, and some in velvet gowns;" nor do we get a very favorable idea of the beauty of the Spanish type.

This incident of the presentation passed off without any serious jar being given to the susceptibilities of the Romans. A considerable crowd had collected in the square of St. Peter's to witness the going in and coming out, and, as is almost always the case, there were some mixed up in it who would have been glad to be spectators of or actors in a row. A few hisses were heard, and attempts to raise a shout for Italy and Victor Emmanuel, as a demonstration in opposition to the Pope's party, but a stop was at once put to all such ill-bred conduct. Within the church the inspection of tickets of admission was pretty rigid, where there was the least suspicion that any with profane intentions had succeeded in obtaining ingress. A good many journalists were looking on, with no more malevolent purpose than to pick up such facts as were worth taking notice of. The chronicler of the Opinione, which newspaper has lately taken up the defense of the rights of the clergy, was, according to his own account, pretty severely catechised, with the threat of being put out, but saved himself by a diplomatic manœuvre. Others escaped by keeping well in the shade. The "Society for the promotion of Catholic Interests," as the organization is called, is willing to have the trumpet blown to all parts of the world, by the members of the press, if only praise of anything is indulged in; but they wish to have no lookers-on at their ceremonies who are disposed to indulge in criticisms.

I omitted to mention that in the church, after the Pope had given his blessing and was carried back toward the staircase by which he entered, followed by the whole mass of his adherents, the enthusiasm of the less educated part of the crowd broke out into vivas of applause, without regard to the injunction put upon them by their priests, that the sanctity of the place must not be violated by such manifestations. They ceased when the Pope made a sign of disapprobation. As for the Pontiff's speech, there is nothing in it worthy of particular notice. It was nearly as long as a sermon, and had some of the characteristics of such a discourse. "Who knows," Pius IX. exclaimed, "that these afflictions of the Church are not caused by sins of mine, or by your failure to do your duty?" He condemned, as usual, matters as they are going on here, and gave it to be distinctly understood that all Italians and others, born Catholics, who are not with him, will finally be gathered into a bundle and thrown into the fire. It is only what he has said many times before. A great many of the Spaniards still linger here; indeed, there does not seem to be any diminution, judging by the immense numbers of Don Basilio hats still seen in the streets. The Spanish priest's hat, being much more extravagant in form than the Italian, is the the object both of curiosity and ridicule to those who have lost all reverence for that half-sacred symbol of the faithful, but to the Italian the type of antipatriotism and reaction.

COMMUNICATION WITH BERMUDA.

From the Hamilton Bermudian.

As for the £5,000 subsidy, let us first say that we think the amount is too large, while at the same time we believe if a steamer cannot be got to run regularly through the whole year without such subsidy, that it pays this country to secure these two great facts of certainty and speed even at such a price. But further, curious ones will find upon examination that it costs the steamer close on the amount of the subsidy to pay the actual expenses in this port alone. Let our readers now turn to another side of the question. Men may talk as they choose, but without a steamer we will be destitute of visitors, and on this subject also there are entirely false impressions abroad. Regular steam communication has made Bermuda a Winter resort, and that alone will keep it such. The steamer, it is true, makes the passage money, but the country makes the best bargain in the matter. Take an example: we know we are within the mark when we say that there are, scattered over Bermuda during at the least four months in the year, 250 visitors, who spend in board, carriage hire, &c., at an average rate of $4 a day. In other words, we have spent here $1,000 a day for at least four months, a sum of $120,000. A subsidized steamer, and only such one, is under our control. Our only objection at present is that she is not sufficiently controlled, especially in crop season. The visitors' list, by judicious management, may be run up to at least five hundred during five or even six months of the year. This would scatter through the country between a quarter and half a million of dollars. People want to know what Bermuda is to do for the future. One great use she can be put to is to make this beautiful land a Winter resort. To do this we must have regular steam communication with New-York.

PANIC IN A CHINESE THEATRE.

PAINFUL INCIDENTS OF THE RUSH OF ALARMED CHINAMEN FROM THEIR THEATRE IN SAN FRANCISCO—NINETEEN MEN KILLED, AND MANY WOUNDED.

From the San Francisco Chronicle, Oct. 31.

At about 12 o'clock last night a frightful accident occurred at the Royal China Theatre, No. 626 Jackson street, which in its horrible details and scenes of terror was unequaled by any event which has occurred in the Chinese quarter for many a day. The entertainment at this theatre was given as a benefit to one of the most popular of the actors, and the house was crowded from the bottom of the pit to the outermost recesses of the gallery, every bench being occupied. In the neighborhood of three thousand men had crowded into the place, quite a number of Chinese females being present, but only two or three white men. At about 12 o'clock, a small fire in some matting in the gallery, which had caught by the sparks from a cigarette or cigar in the hands of some careless Chinaman, was discovered. The man who made this startling discovery, regardless of the consequences, even if he had foreseen them, sounded the alarm immediately in his own tongue, which everybody understood to mean destruction and death by burning. The utmost confusion prevailed, and a panic ensued. Some twenty-five or thirty men from the lower part of the house reached the door first, and were almost simultaneously overwhelmed by the frightened crowd surging down from the gallery. The doors, which are double, and each about twelve feet high by six feet wide, were closed, but a resistless torrent of yellow humanity poured down the stairs, through them without attempting to open either, and the consequence was that the foremost crowd, about thirty in number, were scarcely out before the stairway broke and the massive door fell upon and crushed them to the floor, while over it crowded and jostled the dense audience without a thought of the consequences. In the meantime the fire, which had made no headway, was quenched by a Christian Chinaman named Adam Quinn, who, besides stamping on it, took off his coat and covered it. The actors upon the stage were ignorant of the cause of the panic, and did not stop to inquire concerning it, but continued with their performance, which had the effect of staying many of the frightened Chinese, who were trampling everything down in their efforts to effect an exit. The passage of the dense crowds through the entrance and the heart-rending shrieks of the crushed and dying under the doors alarmed several policemen on Jackson street, who endeavored to effect an entrance into the theatre, and sent to the Police station for assistance. Officer Duffield, a special on Jackson street, was one of the first white men who essayed to stem the panic-stricken tide flowing out of the doorway, and he was obliged to use his club vigorously before he could stop a single man in his way. Half a dozen policemen from the watch which was just about to leave the station for duty on their respective beats, repaired to the scene, and their combined efforts were necessary to stop the outgoing Chinese. The work was accomplished by knocking several Celestials about, and the remainder, realizing that the danger in the theatre, whatever it was, had disappeared, fell back on the crowd and checked their frantic companions.

By this time Capt. Douglas, with a dozen more policemen, arrived with large crowds of white men, who, hearing the alarm, had rushed to the spot. The railing of the stairway leading from the gallery to the lower floor, had given way, and several of the frightened men had fallen down, only to be crushed under foot by their companions. The tide having been checked, the officers raised the prostrated door and removed the dead and dying from beneath it. Nineteen were conveyed to the street dead, and seven others who were rapidly dying.

The bodies were ranged along the sidewalk. The entrance to the theatre, a hall about forty feet in length by some twelve in width, occupied on one side by a couple of Chinese fruit venders, was cleared away, and the audience allowed to pass out. The news of the accident spread like wildfire, and over a thousand Chinese, men and women, from all parts of Chinatown, thronged to the scene, and the sidewalk, the entire length of Jackson street, between Kearny and Dupont, was completely lined with half nude Celestials, gazing with blanched faces at each body as it was carried out into the street. One stalwart Chinaman, weighing about one hundred and seventy pounds, was brought out and laid upon the walk, his clothes torn and his body lacerated by the many feet that had trampled over him. His face was black with suffocation and the crimson fluid was running in a stream from his nose and ears. Life had not yet left him, but in his agony he writhed and crawled about the pavement, swinging his bare arms in the air, and shrieking for the relief that could not come. At the right of the doorway, and at the foot of the four or five steps from the theatre door to the floor of the hallway, is a stairway descending into a dark alley. Several of the foremost Chinese of the crowd that were crushed under the falling door had been precipitated down these stairs, and two were brought up with broken limbs. One was placed at the front entrance in a sitting posture, against a box of fruit, and the other, a young man of high degree, was taken into Yu Hum Choy's—the manager of the theatre—office. A few moments later Dr. Stivers, the City and County Physician, arrived and examined him. As the unfortunate fellow lay upon a low bench covered with matting at one side of the room, he was turning over and over and groaning in agony. As the doctor felt his limbs to ascertain the nature of his injuries, he yelled, "Oh, no, no, me no hurt," as if fearing that his excruciating agonies were to be increased. The other man, somewhat older, who had been placed near the doorway, sat in stolid silence, his pale face, under the flickering rays of a gas jet, recording the most excruciating suffering. About fifteen minutes was consumed in the passage of the crowd of Chinese from the theatre, and the acting of the play by the company was continued until the last deputation had departed, when the actors and actresses rushed in a body to the doorway to discover what had transpired, indulging in many guttural exclamations of terror at the long line of dead bodies placed upon the pavement. With much trouble the crowds which had assembled upon Jackson street were driven by the Police up to Dupont street, where an unsuccessful effort was made to disperse them. Nineteen of the twenty-eight taken from the hallway and removed to the street were found to be dead. Dr. Stivers examined several who betrayed no outward signs of injury, and said they seemed to have been suffocated to death. Eight or ten bore marks of violence, several bleeding at the nose and ears, the crimson stream running across the walk into the gutter, while the faces of three or four others, turned upward in the light, were black and discolored. Several of those taken from under the door lived a few moments after being removed, their agonizing shrieks filling the air and exciting the lamentations of adjacent Chinese, who witnessed the writhing contortions. One Chinaman, who broke frantically through the line of policemen, and passed one of the dying men, threw up his arms and yelled in horror at the agonies of his countrymen. As soon as the bodies were taken from the hallway, and the wounded who could walk had been led into adjoining houses, the Coroner was notified, and the dead bodies taken to the Morgue.

The following description of the Chinese Royal Theatre will prove of interest: The auditorium of this theatre does not compare favorably with the plainest arrangements of one of our cheap travelling circuses in the country. There is a parquet capable of seating about six hundred, and a circle or gallery where four or five hundred can stow themselves. Near the stage, and elevated eight or ten feet above it, are three so-called private boxes, but they are barren of anything like decoration or special comfort. On the opposite side is a small gallery for female visitors, with a seating capacity for about forty persons. These sit with their feet elevated upon the balcony rail, and smoke and eat throughout the performance. The costumes of the actors are grotesque, sometimes hideous in the extreme. Occasionally a little dancing diversifies the play, but this is an exercise never indulged in by the Chinese off the stage, they cannot understand why people should exhaust themselves in this way, when they can employ actors to do it for them. The price of admission varies according to the time of application for a ticket. Those who go in at 8 o'clock pay four bits; and at 10 o'clock only two bits are charged, and an hour or two later admission can be purchased for one bit. Judged from an American standpoint, those who attend a Chinese theatre ought to receive a good salary paid in advance. The attraction at the theatre at the time when the calamity occurred, was one of their usual long-winded performances, being a continuation of a play which had begun some two weeks ago. Its plot bears some resemblance to dramas of the American modern school. A young man is suspected of the crime of theft, is arrested, tried, convicted, and sentenced to various degrees of punishment. First, he is publicly whipped, then racked, and finally brought to the beheading block. Between these punishments a term of imprisonment intervenes, during which the mother and sweetheart of the condemned man frequently appear before the hard-hearted Judge with pitiful appeals for mercy and clemency, all of which appear to be of no avail. When one of the characters in the play falls upon the stage, either from the effects of a blow or a fainting attack, supernumeraries at once step forward and place under the head of the fallen man or woman a small block of wood, or other substance, for a pillow. A slain person lies in this way until the end of the scene, when he coolly rises and walks off the stage, in view of the whole audience. The stage has no flies, shifting-scenes, or drop-curtain, but is simply an elevated platform, with two doors at the rear, through which the actors make their entrance and exit. The orchestra occupies the rear of the stage, keeping up an infernal din with gongs, Chinese guitars and fiddles, triangle and cymbals, throughout the dialogue. On either side of the performers upon the stage, not less than a dozen actors and attachés sit and lounge about, smoking, munching sugar-cane or sweetmeats, and at times even crossing the stage while a scene is in progress. The audience at a Chinese theatre never applaud. Occasionally a half-suppressed murmur of satisfaction is heard, but no clapping of hands, stamping of feet, whistles or cat-calls are indulged in. The men sit with their hats on, generally posting themselves upon the backs of the seats instead of on the benches. Smoking and eating are constantly in progress among the spectators, and the practice of running in and out of the theatre during the play is indulged.

ELECTION DAY SCENES.

HOW THE CITY'S VOTE WAS CAST.

THE WORK AT THE POLLS AND IN THE COURTS—SLIGHT DISTURBANCES IN THE LOWER DISTRICTS, BUT NO SERIOUS AFFRAYS—A GENERALLY QUIET DAY AND A LARGE VOTE.

The unfavorable weather of yesterday, while it operated in some instances to keep voters from the polls, did not, upon the whole, diminish the general voting throughout the City. On the contrary, the large crowds which congregated at the different polling-stations during the day unmistakably indicated that an exceptionally heavy vote was being cast. Taking this fact into consideration, the order and quietness with which the voting was conducted became one of the noticeable features of the day. This desirable condition of affairs was without doubt largely attributable to the excellent arrangement of the Police Force. There were no desperate fights or other disgraceful disturbances, such as used to stain the history of the day under the old Tammany Hall régime. There were, too, but few attempts at illegal voting, and arrests in all such cases were very promptly made. Indeed, the general suspension of business, and the absence of any riotous demonstration, made the day seem like the Sabbath in many parts of the City. Taken altogether, it may be regarded as one of the quietest and most orderly elections which has taken place in the City in many years.

In the First, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Assembly Districts comparatively few attempts at illegal voting were made, and all persons who endeavored in any way to interfere with voters were either warned away from the polls or arrested. The United States Marshals and the Supervisors of Election were vigilant, and fulfilled their duties fearlessly. About 2 o'clock in the afternoon, Charles Fromes, who was illegally registered as a resident of No. 14 Greenwich street, appeared at the poll at No. 6 Greenwich street and attempted to vote. Deputy Marshal Robert Closey immediately produced a warrant and tried to arrest him. The roughs in the vicinity, noticing this, quickly surrounded the officer and his prisoner, and boisterously threatened the former with violence unless Fromes was released. Failing in this attempt at intimidation, the crowd surged in upon him and Dr. Merrill, a sturdy Republican who was aiding him, and tore the prisoner from the officer's grasp. Some of the ruffians then turned upon the Deputy Marshal, knocked him down, and dragged him through a particularly filthy part of the roadway. Dr. Merrill was also ill treated by the mob.

In the Seventeenth Election District of the First Assembly District James Nestor was arrested for illegal voting. In the Fifth Assembly District the day was not marred by much violence. As was to have been expected, some street fights occurred, but they were all of short duration, and none of the combatants were arrested. In this Assembly District, however, two Democratic Inspectors of Election, who were unable to overcome the peculiar habits they acquired in "Ring" days, were caught in attempts to nullify the votes of Republicans. De Witt M. Judah, for instance, a Democratic Inspector in the Eleventh Election District of the Fifth Assembly District, was seen to drop some ballots behind the boxes, instead of placing them in the glass receptacles. He was arrested and locked up in the Eighth Precinct Station. Matthew Ryan, a maudlin drunkard, who resides at No. 76 King street, was induced yesterday afternoon, just before the poll closed, to attempt to vote at the polling place at Washington and Charlton streets. His ballots were rejected, and he was arrested. It being subsequently learned, however, that other persons were responsible for his act, he was promptly released.

There was a quiet election in the Fourth and Sixth Assembly Districts. In the former two men were arrested for attempting to vote illegally, and they were taken before a United States Commissioner. In the Sixth District Thomas J. Campbell, a brother of the model Civil Justice, "Tim" Campbell, was arrested, late in the afternoon, for engaging in a street fight. He was taken to the Thirteenth Precinct Station-house, but was not locked up, as Patrick J. McAleer, a Tammany candidate for Assemblyman, gave bail for his appearance in court this morning.

The residents in the Fourth Ward were actively at work at an early hour in the morning, fully prepared to vote early and, if possible, often. The presence of the Police force and of the United States Marshals, however, kept these enthusiastic citizens within the bounds of prudence. Of course, there were many who could not be restrained by any constitutional restrictions from a too ardent support of a Democratic ticket, but such characters were summarily dealt with by the vigilant corps of watchers and inspectors who were appointed for the purpose of preventing illegal voting. A few gangs of drunken ruffians visited the polling booths and endeavored to intimidate honest citizens from casting their votes for other candidates than those dictated by John Kelly and Tammany Hall, but a quiet determination on the part of respectable citizens to vote without being influenced or intimidated by the rowdies of the district frustrated these designs to increase the Democratic majority. Several votes were challenged, because of proved fraudulent registration, and the culprits were marched to the Tombs Police Court, where the lenient Justice Duffy in the majority of cases found a loophole of escape for them. Occasionally rival Democratic factions came into collision, when a free but skirmishing fight was indulged in, without, however, causing any serious disturbance. The Police, as a rule, were vigilant, and Capt. Murray, of the Fourth Precinct, had his men so advantageously posted that whenever ungovernable Tammany voters showed a desire to indulge their peculiar propensities they were taken in charge and marched to the station-house for safe keeping. The fact that but so comparatively few fights were allowed to develop into serious proportions reflects credit on the activity and discipline of the Police officers who were detailed to preserve order in this section of the City.

While there were some disputes at different polling places on the east side of the City, north of Fourteenth street, the voting, as a whole, was remarkably orderly and quiet, attempts at illegal voting being promptly stopped, and the offenders taken into custody. "Dick" Croker, the Tammany candidate for Coroner, worked at the polls throughout the day, endeavoring to influence voters to cast their ballots in his favor. In the Eighteenth Assembly District ex-Senator James O'Brien was very active, and Croker's vote was undoubtedly lessened in consequence of his efforts. An immense amount of "scratching" of the local ticket was done by voters on both sides, Republicans seeming to have but little interest in anything except the election of their candidates for national and State offices, and Democrats having favorites on the Republican ticket, for whom they were determined to vote in spite of the command of the leaders. "Pasters" were in good demand, and there was a larger variety of ballots at the polls than there has ever been at any previous election. Workers for Mr. Peter Cooper were present in all the election districts, but were not able to influence many people to vote for the great philanthropical greenback candidate. The fact that the United States Marshals were present at every polling place, and vigilantly discharging their duties, prevented many men who had fraudulently registered from attempting to vote. In Second avenue, near Thirty-first street, an alleged attempt at illegal voting gave rise to a fracas, in which Edward Donnelly, of No. 339 East Thirty-first street, struck Patrick Maguire. The latter was not badly injured, but the affair for the time occasioned much excitement. The liquor saloons everywhere in this quarter of the City kept their front doors closed, but side doors were open, and the places were generally crowded.

In Westchester County, also, the day was without serious disturbance, and a very large vote was polled. In Brooklyn there were several arrests for illegal voting, and in Jersey City and Hoboken thirty-five persons were taken before United States Commissioner Muirhead for this offense, but of this number only two were held for trial.

PRESERVING THE PEACE.

THE ARRANGEMENTS AND PRECAUTIONS OF THE UNITED STATES MARSHAL AND THE POLICE.

The arrangements of United States Marshal Fiske for the proper preservation of order at the polls yesterday were perfect. Aside from the large number of special deputies appointed and placed at the many polling places, a large reserve, numbering about three hundred men, mostly veteran soldiers, were kept during the day in the Post Office building. The organization and management of this reserve was entrusted entirely to Capt. Charles N. Brackett, his experience in the Police Department peculiarly fitting him for this office. The men were divided by him into squads of fifty each, and placed under the command of trusty officers, the different bands being quartered in certain rooms where they could be called upon at a moment's notice. Several dispatches were received during the day by Marshal Fiske from the many polling places, asking for more men in contemplation of disturbance, and these were referred to Capt. Brackett. Such aid as he deemed necessary was immediately sent, and in this way over a hundred men were sent during the day to augment the force already at the polls. In six or eight instances men were sent to quell contemplated riots in as many parts of the City, but all of which were happily avoided. Early in the day a squad of fifteen men were sent to quell a disturbance arising from an arrest made by a Deputy Marshal in Dry Dock street. Considerable trouble was threatened at the time, but upon the arrival of the posse it was quieted without harm to any one, and the prisoner was safely brought away. The only other disturbance reported at the Marshal's office was at the Third Election District of the First Assembly District, in the vicinity of the Battery, but this also was easily quieted upon the arrival of the deputies telegraphed for.

The entire force was dismissed at 7 o'clock in the evening, with the understanding that they would be notified in a few days, through the TIMES, when they would be paid for their services.

The Police arrangements for the preservation of the peace were ample. The entire force was placed on duty at 6 o'clock in the morning. As required by law two patrolmen were stationed at each of the 569 polling places in the City. Beside the regular force on patrol, reserves were held in readiness at the various Police Stations, and the force on those precincts in which trouble was anticipated was strengthened by drafts from other precincts, and from the steamboat and court squads. Inspectors Speight and McDermott were on duty at their head-quarters in their respective districts. At Police Head-quarters Superintendent Walling was in charge, and the reserve there consisted of the Broadway Squad, under Capt. Garland, a detachment of the City Hall Police under Capt. Walsh, and the mounted Squad under Sergt. Revel. Stages were held in readiness to convey reinforcements to any point where their services might be needed, but their services were not at any time called into requisition. The Commissioners were at Head-quarters throughout the day in continuous session for the purpose of taking action in the case of delinquent Inspectors of Election and Poll Clerks. David Roche, an Inspector in the Eleventh Election District of the Fourteenth Assembly District, and Peter M. Sachs, an Inspector of the Fifteenth Election District of the Ninth Assembly District, were removed for intoxication. J. T. Underhill, a poll clerk at the Eighth Election of the Sixteenth Assembly District, was also removed for a similar cause. About a dozen Inspectors failed to put in an appearance when the polls opened, and were removed and other appointed in their places.

THE WORK OF MR. DAVENPORT.

THE ARRESTS FOR ILLEGAL VOTING—NAMES OF THE PRISONERS HELD TO ANSWER.

During the entire day the scene in the United States Circuit Court, where Commissioner John I. Davenport held session, seemed to promise an interest that could hardly attach to the hearing on a charge of illegal voting. From an early hour in the morning the Deputy United States Marshals began to arrive with prisoners arrested upon warrants issued on Saturday and Monday, and in such numbers that it was difficult to find accommodation for the crowd. By noon the prison on the fourth floor was overflowing, and the court-room was equally so, and it was not until late in the afternoon that the rush of complaints began to diminish. The arrests brought before Commissioner Davenport included all those made in that part of the City below Spring and Rivington streets, in all numbering about two hundred. United States Attorney Bliss was present during the day in the prosecution of the cases. In most of the cases the charge was that of fraudulent registration, and in the majority of them a mistake either in name or number, being conclusively shown, the parties were discharged. A number, however, were committed for examination, among them the following: Daniel H. O'Brien, Tenth Assembly District, registering as from No. 25 East Third street; Charles McGinty, Fourteenth Assembly District, registering as from No. 15 Third avenue; John Murray, Third Assembly District, registering as from No. 26 Little Twelfth street; Adam McCormick, First Assembly District; Robert Cook, Second Assembly District, registering as from No. 149 Chatham street, and Patrick O'Carroll, Fourth Assembly District, registering as from No. 323 Front street. John Wilkenshaw was brought before Mr. Davenport, charged with being a "repeater," and was committed for examination.

Commissioner Shields held court at Republican Head-quarters, corner of Broadway and Thirty-third street, during the morning. He disposed of twenty-five cases, in most of which the parties were discharged, it appearing that they had been arrested either through mistake as to their identity, or on account of carelessness on their part in giving wrong names or residences. Herman Winter, charged with fraudulent registration, and George W. Marsh with giving a false residence, were held for examination. In the afternoon the Commissioner opened court in the United States District Court room and disposed of thirty-five cases, most of the arrested parties being discharged. John Gorry, of No. 75 Broome street, charged with fraudulent registration, was committed in default of $500 bail. John Mullen, an Inspector of Election in the Twenty-third Election District of the Eighth Assembly District, was charged with concealing in his hand two of the tickets offered by a voter, with the intent of throwing them away. He was committed in default of $1,000 bail.

Commissioner Little held Court at Lincoln Hall, corner of Third avenue and One Hundred and Sixteenth street. Several prisoners were brought in from the Manhattanville district, but Simeon Geoghan, who swore in his vote on a fraudulent naturalization paper issued by Judge McCunn, in 1868, was the only one held.

Commissioner Deuel sat at the Lincoln Club rooms, No. 12 University place, and disposed of forty cases, discharging twenty-eight of the defendants, some on their own recognizances, and holding twelve. Of the latter, John S. Butler was held for trial without bail, and Cornelius Burns, Henry Bach, and John Murray were held for further examination.

Early in the morning, Deputy Marshals Crowley, Newcome and others made a raid on the lodging-house at No. 207 Hudson street, and arrested three men charged with false registration. The parties, who are recognized tramps, were committed by Commissioner Davenport for examination to-day.

THE ARBITRATION COMMITTEE.

Gen. Francis C. Barlow, and Messrs. O. P. C. Billings, F. F. Marberry, and Peter B. Olney, the Arbitration Committee selected to decide on questions of fact in disputed cases, as to the right of parties to vote who had been prevented from doing so, or feared they might be, sat at the Union Square Hotel yesterday, from early in the morning until the polls closed in the afternoon. The proceedings were quite tame, their being only about thirty cases to dispose of.

THE DAY IN THE POLICE COURTS.

A FEW CASES OF ILLEGAL VOTING—AND ONE OF DEMOCRATIC INTIMIDATION—THE PRISONERS GENERALLY BAILED.

At the Tombs Police Court yesterday Judge Duffy disposed of a considerable number of cases arising from the peculiar incidents of election day. The number of charges of drunkenness was not unusually large and presented no unusual features. The following saloon keepers were charged with having violated the law by selling liquor before the closing of the polls. In the First Police Precinct, Jeremiah Campbell, William Doty, Stephen Detmas, and August Kuhn; in the Sixth Precinct, Samuel Aarons and John Shea; and in the Fifth Precinct, Samuel Thompson. They were all discharged except Aarons, who, it was alleged, had the front door of his store open, instead of violating the law in the orthodox fashion, by letting people in by a side door. He was held to answer at General Sessions in $100. A case of alleged bribery was next heard. Morris Isaacs, a Jew, residing at No. 6 Mott street, charged Marks Cohn, also a Jew, and who lives at No. 59 Bayard street, with having given him a dollar to vote the ticket which he gave him. Mr. Cowan, attorney at law, appeared for Cohn. Isaacs' story was that about midday yesterday Cohn came up to him, gave him a dollar, and told him to go and vote the Republican ticket. Isaacs pocketed the dollar and gave information against Cohn, who was arrested. Cohn swore that he owed Isaacs $1 50, and, meeting him accidentally, offered him a dollar in part payment. He denied giving Isaacs a Republican ticket, and Isaacs could not produce the ticket he said he had received, but the Judge remanded the prisoner. Only three cases of alleged fraudulent voting were called, and no evidence was offered. The ordinary business of the court was light.

The first case of illegal voting that came before Justice Bixby, in the Washington Place Police Court, was that of William P. Holl and his son, who are both residents of this City, and lawfully entitled to vote here. Mr. Holl and his son are both temporarily employed in the service of the Government at Washington, but their residence is at No. 358 West Twentieth street, and there their family live and have lived for a number of years past. Mr. Holl, who is seventy years old, came to New-York several weeks ago, with his son, in order to be in time to register and when the polls opened for registration, he presented himself before the Inspectors and stated the facts as given above. A vote was then taken by the Inspectors as to whether he could lawfully register, and as one voted in the negative, Mr. Holl and his son went to Police Head-quarters and there saw Mr. Hasbrouck, who gave them a note to the Inspector saying that they were entitled to register according to law, and their names were then placed on the books. Yesterday the above gentlemen appeared at the polls and upon casting their vote for the Republican ticket, as it was previously known that they would do, they were immediately arrested and taken before Justice Bixby in the Washington Place Police Court. There Joseph McDonald, Inspector of the Eleventh Election of the Thirteenth Assembly District swore to an affidavit that William P. Holl had voted illegally and unlawfully, as he was not a resident of this city. Mr. Holl stated to Justice Bixby that he had registered by the advice of Mr. Hasbrouck, of Police Head-quarters, and that according to law he was entitled to vote. Justice Bixby, after reviewing the facts of the case as represented to him, said Mr. Holl was entitled to vote, but as the affidavit was sworn to he would have to hold him in $500 bail to answer. Bail was promptly furnished by Hon. J. D. Lawson, ex-member of Congress, who was present, and is a warm friend of Mr. Holl.

Vincento Plato, a Cuban, residing at No. 53 South Washington place, was also brought before Justice Bixby on a complaint of illegal voting, made by Marshal William Thornton. Plato registered from No. 9 Varick street, and an inspection of those premises proved them to be houses not inhabited by anyone. In view of these facts, Justice Bixby held the prisoner in $500 bail to answer. From one of the crowd of Cubans who filled the room upon learning that one of their number had been arrested, a TIMES reporter learned that Plato was one of a gang of two hundred and fifty laborers who had been paid $5 each to vote the Democratic ticket. The informant said that many of the gang had been arrested, and that as they could not get any Democrats to go bail for their release, he would "squeal" on the ones giving the bribe. Finally, a Cuban was found who furnished bail, and the whole party left the court-room, vowing vengeance on those who had led them into difficulties and then left them to their fate.

John Pain, arrested on complaint of T. B. Fisher, of No. 267 Seventh avenue, for illegal voting, was held in $1,000 bail to answer.

At the Essex Market Police Court, John Lantry, a Deputy United States Marshal, of No. 619 East Twelfth street, was arraigned before Justice Smith on a charge of assault, the complainant being ex-Alderman Edward Costello, of No. 626 East Twelfth street. It appears that as Lantry was attempting to arrest John Cavanagh, of No. 208 Avenue C, for illegal obstruction of the Police, he called some citizens to his assistance, and, when they responded to his call, drew a revolver, and without provocation, threatened to blow out the brains of Costello. Lantry was held in $300 bail to answer.

AN ACCIDENTAL PATRICIDE.

On Monday night last John Baldwin, aged fifty-two years, and living at No. 322 Pearl street, quarreled with his son at the corner of Peck slip and Pearl street. According to the statement of the son and his mother, the father, who was intoxicated, attacked the young man with a knife, and, while running after him from Pearl street around the corner into Peck Slip, stumbled, and struck his head violently against the wheel of an express wagon. He was senseless when picked up, and died at 12:30 A. M. yesterday. His son was arrested by Officers Carr and Musgrove, of the Fourth Precinct, on the charge of homicide. A post-mortem examination of the father's body by Coroner Ellinger's deputy, Dr. Goldschmidt, revealed an extensive fracture of the skull, which, in the opinion of the doctor, could not have been produced by a mere fall. The witnesses of the occurrence were all positive in the belief that the son had not assaulted his father, although the latter, who had the reputation of having been a person of violent temper, attacked the young man with a large knife. Notwithstanding these assertions, the Coroner decided to commit the prisoner until Friday, when an inquest will be held.

SUICIDE AT THE COLEMAN HOUSE.

On Oct. 29, a man engaged a room at the Coleman House, No. 1,169 Broadway, registering as J. F. Christie, of Rochester. He was assigned to a room on the top floor fronting Broadway, after paying the hotel clerk in advance for a week's occupancy of the apartment. In demeanor he was unobtrusive and retiring, seldom leaving his room. On Sunday evening he visited the billiard saloon, and after witnessing several games, retired for the night. A chamber-maid assigned to the top floor on Monday morning endeavored to gain an entrance to Mr. Christie's room, but finding the door locked concluded that the occupant was asleep. Yesterday the woman again tried the door, and finding it fastened, reported the circumstance to the landlord, who burst open the door, and discovered Christie's body lying on the bed, with a pistol shot wound through the forehead directly over the right eye. A Derringer pistol was grasped in the right hand, and an open copy of the Bible was found on a small table near the bed. From the condition of the body, and the fact that the gas was lighted, it was evident that Christie had probably shot himself on Sunday night. Deputy Coroner Marsh, who assumed charge of the body, found among the effects of the suicide some private papers and a pocket-book containing the name of William Wood, but there was nothing either in the papers or the book that afforded any clue to the motive for the act. The body was removed to the Morgue.

"TONY" PASTOR ROBBED.

Mr. Antonia Pastor, better known as "Tony" Pastor, the proprietor of a well-known place of amusement on Broadway, appeared before Justice Duffy, at the Tombs Police Court yesterday, to prefer a charge of theft against James McGuire, who gave his residence as No. 323 Avenue A. Mr. Pastor was standing on the pavement in front of the Metropolitan Hotel, in Broadway, about 11 P. M. on Monday, when the prisoner came up, seized his watch-chain, and ran off down the street followed by Mr. Pastor, who never lost sight of the alleged thief till he was caught. On being taken to the Tombs the thief was searched, but the chain, which was valued at $100, and to which was attached a horse-shoe diamond-set locket valued at $500, was not found in his possession. The accused pleaded that he was "an honest, hard-working man," and Tony Pastor responded that he "committed one of the most barefaced robberies I ever heard of." McGuire was held to answer in default of $3,000 bail.

BURGLARS ARRESTED.

John Jennings and John Finnegan, both residents of Jersey City, broke into the grocery store of ex-Sheriff McAnally, between 12 and 1 o'clock yesterday morning, and had removed about $150 worth of goods to an adjoining alley-way, when officer McLaughlan was notified. The officer went at once to the place and found the front door open and pushed his way in. He found the men at work and knocked one down with a well-directed blow from his club, while he "covered" the other man with his pistol. With the aid of officer Van Ness both men were arrested and lodged in the station-house. Both men were committed for trial yesterday morning by Police Justice Keese.

A PHYSICIAN SWINDLED.

Dr. Pomeroy, of No. 12 West 35th street, while walking through Broadway near Union square on Monday last, was accosted by a stranger who, after claiming acquaintance with him, induced him to go to No. 103 East Eleventh street, where he pretended that he was going to have a lottery ticket cashed. At the place indicated the doctor was induced to engage in a game of chance with dice, and was thus swindled out of $60 in cash and a check for $580, payment of which has since been stopped. The place was raided upon by Capt. McCullagh, who seized a number of spurious checks and all the paraphernalia of a "banco" game.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—No. 122. Schocker vs. Hartford Fire Insurance Company. Error to the Circuit Court for the Northern District of Illinois. This was an action to recover on a policy of insurance, which provided against assignment without the consent of the company, and also that in case the insured did not own the fee simple of the property, or his interest therein was not stated, it should be void. The insured did not own the fee simple, but had purchased and was to have the same conveyed to him as soon as he was able to make the final payments. This fact was not known to the company nor its agent. Subsequently the property was sold under a mortgage on the insured's interest in the premises, and the agent of the company wrote into the policy that the loss, if any, was to be paid to the purchaser at the sale, Shocker, "as his interest may appear." The property being destroyed by fire, the company declined to pay, because of the failure to properly set out the title of the assured to the property. The court below sustained this refusal, and it is here contended that the title of the purchaser, to whom the insurance was transferred, was known to the agent; for if it was understood that his title was in fee, the words "as his interest may appear" are without sense or meaning. Case submitted on the briefs. W. T. Burgess for plaintiff in error. George O. Ides for defendant.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

Col. John Forney will lecture on Monday next, at Chickering Hall, on "Our Centennial in Europe."

The hydraulic elevator in the north-west corner of the Post Office building, was used yesterday for the first time, and was tested by an immense number of people during the day. It gave universal satisfaction, running with an ease hardly expected in elevators of this class.

At the Chambers Street Hospital yesterday, Coroner Ellinger investigated the death of John Magni, an Italian, and concluded that it was the result of a blow struck by a man named Callahan, in a street fracas on Oct. 15. Callahan has since been arrested and committed to await the result of an inquest.

Last evening Edward Rooney, aged twenty-one, of No. 225 East Forty-first street, quarreled with James Boylan, of No. 221 East Thirty-eighth street, at Second avenue and Fortieth street, and during the fight which ensued Boylan shot Rooney in the abdomen, inflicting a serious wound. Boylan was arrested.

Chief Justice Davis and Judge Donohue, of the Supreme Court; Judges Van Hoesen and Van Brunt of the Court of Common Pleas, and Judge Speir, of the Superior Court, were in their private rooms in the New Court-house building all day yesterday, in order to await any emergency that might arise. There was no call for their services.

A fire occurred last evening, at 6:30 o'clock, at Nos. 841 and 843 Broadway, occupied by Messrs. Peloubet, Pelton & Co., as an organ factory. Peloubet, Pelton & Co. estimate their loss at $5,000, which is fully covered by insurance. G. G. Rockwood, photographer, occupying part of the building, loses $15,000. Wallace Scott, Otto Erk, and F. W. Herring, artists, having studios in the building, lose $1,500. H. Guilmard, a hair dealer on the first floor, was damaged by water to the amount of $2,000. The buildings belong to the Roosevelt estate, and are damaged to the extent of $4,000.

BROOKLYN.

William Jones and John Preston, both colored, and Edward Mullen, were arrested for fighting at the polls in the Twenty-fourth Ward.

The cabin of the schooner Wardwell, lying at the Empire Stores, was broken open last night and $40 worth of clothing stolen. It is thought the robbery was committed by river thieves, as the night watchman who was on duty on the schooner all night saw no one enter or leave the vessel.

Patrick Culligan, of No. 34 Middagh street, entered the premises of John W. Hickman, No. 72 Nassau street, at an early hour yesterday morning, and both men being under the influence of liquor, a fight ensued, during which both men were cut with a knife, and Culligan was also injured in the head with a tumbler. Hickman was arrested and locked up in the Second Precinct Station-house, and Jeremiah Mahoney, of No. 98 High street, was also arrested and held as a witness.

NEW-JERSEY.

John Hughes and Thomas Gordon were arrested in Newark yesterday charged with having being implicated in a number of recent burglaries committed in that city. A vest which one of them wore was identified by Mr. W. Ogletree, of Broad street, as having been stolen from him.

MARINE DISASTERS.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 7.—Capt. Wilkins, of the tug Bruce, reports a sunken vessel in the channel a short distance north-east of the Pea Patch. It is apparently a large sloop, with the spars floating in the water, and held to the wreck by the rigging. A telegram to the Board of Underwriters from Nassau, via Havana, the 5th inst., reports the total loss on the Bahamas of the schr. Annie Virden, hence, with coal for Galveston. The crew were saved.

QUEBEC, Nov. 7.—Intelligence from Ellis Bay, Anticosti, says on Oct. 19, during a violent gale, a large schr. ran ashore between West Point and Ellis Bay and broke in two. Her crew were saved. A trading schr. also ran ashore at English Bay. Her crew were saved. Three men, named John Wright, Sr., John Wright, Jr., and James Bodreau, were drowned while crossing in a boat from Ellis Bay to English Bay.

HALIFAX, Nov. 7.—There was a south-east gale with rain here to-day, and a considerable sea in the harbor, but no serious damage to shipping is reported. In Antogonish a heavy snow-storm prevailed. An American brig, lumber laden, is reported ashore at Porter's Passage, E. of Halifax. The schr. Morning Light, from Boston, for Bridgewater, with a general cargo, is ashore at Cape Negro. Late reports from Newfoundland say there have been as many as thirty ship-wrecks on that coast since the 1st of October. Several lives have been lost. A late case was that of the schr. Minnie Cronon, of Halifax, which left Bay of Islands on the 15th of October for Pictou. She has been fallen in with dismantled and sinking. The crew and three or four passengers are supposed to have been lost. The schr. Lizzie, of Tregmouth, from St. John's, for Glace Bay, went ashore at Port Tova on Friday night last, and is a total wreck. The crew were saved.

THE BATTLE WON.

A REPUBLICAN VICTORY IN THE NATION.

GOV. HAYES ELECTED PRESIDENT AND WILLIAM A. WHEELER VICE PRESIDENT—THE REPUBLICANS CARRY TWENTY-ONE STATES, CASTING 185 ELECTORAL VOTES—A REPUBLICAN MAJORITY IN THE NEXT CONGRESS.

The dispatches received since our last issue confirm the reports on which THE TIMES yesterday claimed 181 electoral votes for Gov. HAYES. On Wednesday the following States were put down as surely Republican: Colorado, California, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nevada, Nebraska, New-Hampshire, Oregon, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, Wisconsin, Louisiana, and South Carolina. Some of these States were claimed by the Democrats, but all intelligence, thus far received, not only shows that the above estimate was correct, but that Florida, which was left in doubt, has gone Republican by at least 1,500 majority—our latest dispatches say 2,000—and that the two Republican Congressmen are also elected. Encouraging reports were received from Oregon early yesterday morning, and in the afternoon came the decisive news that the Democrats conceded the State, which had given a Republican majority of over one thousand, and gained a Republican Congressman. In Nebraska the same condition of affairs was shown. There the Republican majority rose to 8,000. Dispatches from Nevada made it certain that the State had gone for Hayes. The latest news from South Carolina shows a Republican victory, the Democrats conceding the State to Hayes and the Republicans claiming 5,000 majority. Louisiana is one of the States which the Democrats have claimed; but our dispatches, coming from various sources in the State, show that it has gone Republican. The latest intelligence points to the certain election of Gov. Rutherford B. Hayes to the Presidency, and a Republican victory in the nation.

All the Congressional districts have not been heard from definitely, but the advices received destroy the Democratic majority in the present House. The indications now are that the Republicans have elected 145 members, (including those chosen in September and October,) and the Democrats 145. In the present Congress the Republicans have but 110 members, to 183 Democrats. There is, therefore, a Republican net gain of 73. All the Representatives have now been chosen except in New-Hampshire, which is now represented by one Republican and two Democrats, and will elect in March, 1877.

The following table summarizes the result of the election, showing the votes cast by each State in the Electoral College, and to whom they will go:

THE RESULT IN NEW YORK.

MAJORITIES BY COUNTIES ON THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

The official returns have been received from more than half the counties in the State, showing the majority given by each on the electoral vote. The subjoined table is made up from these returns, from our private dispatches, and from careful estimates based on the Presidential vote of 1872. It may be relied upon as being nearly correct. It is not probable that any later returns will greatly vary the result as now given. The complete returns of the vote on Governor have been received from only a few counties. So far as received, they show that both candidates ran slightly behind their respective Electoral tickets. In nearly all instances the Republican county tickets have been elected. In the next Legislature the Republicans will have a majority of 15 Assemblymen. The Senate holds over, but from death and resignation there were two vacancies to fill, and a Democrat and a Republican have been elected to fill them. This leaves a Republican majority of six. Of the Congressional delegation there are nineteen Republicans and fifteen Democrats, a Republican gain of four. Following is the table of county majorities:

CHARLESTON, Nov. 8.—A serious riot arose here about five o'clock this afternoon in Broad street, near the News and Courier office, where a throng has been collected all day scanning the bulletin board for election returns. Col. E. W. M. Mackey, Republican, and ex-member of Congress, was conversing with some gentlemen about the election, he holding that Chamberlain was elected, and the group around him offering to bet that Hampton was. While thus engaged, some of the Democrats, who were listening to the talk, withdrew to the opposite side of the street, and began firing at him, but luckily missed him. The shots were heard several squares off, and hundreds of white and colored men ran toward the scene. In a short time the streets were filled with excited men, and there was imminent danger of an extensive riot. The firing continued for several minutes. The policemen on duty in the neighborhood were fired at, and one or two of them wounded. A detachment of Police armed with Winchester rifles was at once dispatched from the station-house, and succeeded in driving the mob away and quelling the riot. A young man named Walter was killed, one negro was mortally and eight others seriously wounded. A detachment of troops under Col. Hunt was marched to the station-house. There is intense excitement all over the city, and the rifle clubs have armed themselves. The feeling between the Republicans and Democrats is very strong. Efforts are being made to allay the excitement by prominent men of both parties, but the aspect is threatening.

LOUISIANA NOT IN DOUBT.

THE STATE REPUBLICAN—LARGE REPUBLICAN GAINS IN THE PRINCIPAL PARISHES.

Special Dispatch to The New-York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 8.—Returns continue to show large Republican gains. Assumption Parish, where Nicholls resides, gives 300 against him. The same parish went Democratic in 1874. Lafourché and Iberia Parishes which also went Democratic in 1874, are carried by the Republicans. All have lost only in one parish, as far as heard from, except the five parishes selected by the Democratic committee for intimidations. Returns from the river parishes, where we have overwhelming majorities, are expected by steam-boat to-morrow.

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 8.—The latest returns indicate that the State has gone Republican beyond a reasonable doubt. Returns come in slowly, but large Republican gains are reported everywhere, except in five small parishes.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 8.—There are as yet no definite returns, and matters stand as at 11:30 last night. Both parties claim the State. Indications point to Democratic gains in the interior parishes. The Democrats elected Elam for Congress over Smith in the Fourth District. The city will probably give 10,000 Democratic majority.

The following special is from a Democratic source:

CLINTON, East Feliciana Parish, Nov. 8.—Owing to the failure of the Register to fill his appointments, a large number of voters were not registered. Seventeen hundred and forty-three registered votes were polled, of which Hayes got three and Tilden the balance. At a poll conducted under the United States Supervisor 443 voters who had been unable to register deposited their ballots in a separate box, all Democratic. The Republicans refrained from voting. There was no intimidation, and the gross number of voters was within 300 of the number at the last election. Many Democratic voters were deterred by want of registration. The whites and blacks fraternized, and all are happy and jubilant.

The above majority of 1,740 shows a Democratic gain of 2,581 over the vote of 1874. Prominent Republicans say the voting in East Feliciana was informal, and the votes will not be counted by the Returning Board, as the Registrar sent there was intimidated and run off. Other Democratic parishes will be treated in the same way for similar reasons. Charges of intimidation, fraud, &c., will be made.

Ouachitâ Parish gives a Democratic majority of 1,087, being a Democratic gain of 1,915 over the vote of 1874, when Dubucklet, Rep., received 828 majority.

The following official and unofficial returns o parishes have been received here:

Iberia.—Republican 1,453, Democratic 1,246—a Republican gain of 377.

Calcasieu.—Democratic 1,241, Republican 95—a net Republican gain of 25.

West Feliciana—Democratic by 250 to 300 majority—a Democratic gain of 1,109.

Jackson. Democratic, 1,046; Republican, 330—a Democratic gain of 265.

Comparisons are made with the 1874 returns of the Democratic Conservative Committee. The election was peaceable and quiet. No disturbance has been reported from any quarter of the State.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 8.—Latest returns from Oregon show a Republican majority of 1,000. The Democrats now concede that State to the Republicans.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 8—10 P. M.—Oregon is conceded Republican by a small majority. A dispatch just received from Portland says Oregon is safe for from 3,000 to 5,000 Republican majority.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 8.—A private dispatch from Virginia City, Nev., says Nevada is sure for a decided Republican majority.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 8.—Scattering returns from Nevada leave no doubt that the State has gone Republican by a fair majority.

WISCONSIN SURE FOR HAYES.

A REPUBLICAN MAJORITY OF 3,000—THE CONGRESSIONAL DELEGATION.

Special Dispatches to the New-York Times.

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 8.—The Chairman of the Republican State Committee claims a Republican majority in the State of 3,000. Caswell, in the Second District, is elected to Congress, making probably five Republicans from the State.

Twenty-five Minutes Past Eight P. M.—Three hundred and forty-one towns give a Republican majority of 2,876, a Republican net gain of 7,971. Vernon and other Republican counties still to hear from.

Fifteen Minutes Past Nine P. M.—The Republicans elect five Congressmen, as follows: Williams, in the First District, receives 5,500; Caswell, in the Second, 740; Hazleton, in the Third, 2,500; Humphrey, in the Seventh, 6,000, and Pound, in the Eighth, by a small majority. The Democrats elect Lynde, in the Fourth District, by 5,100; Bragg, in the Fifth, 5,000; Bouck, in the Sixth, 1,700. This leaves the Wisconsin delegation the same as last year. The Republican gains in the State are constantly increasing. There is no doubt of a Republican majority of over 3,000.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 8.—The Congressmen elect from this State are as follows: Williams, Rep.; Caswell, Rep.; Hazleton, Rep.; Lynde, Dem.; Bragg, Dem.; Bouck, Dem.; Humphrey, Rep.; and Pound, Rep. Hayes' majority is from 3,000 to 5,000.

PENNSYLVANIA.

REPUBLICAN GAIN OF EIGHT OF NINE CONGRESSMEN AND THE LEGISLATURE REPUBLICAN IN BOTH BRANCHES—THE ABORTIVE ATTEMPTS AT FRAUD BY THE DEMOCRATS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—The majority in the State of Pennsylvania will be reduced considerably by the latest returns from the Democratic counties, but in other respects the victory is more complete than was anticipated. The gains in members of Congress are claimed to be eight certainly, and possibly nine, after deducting a loss of one. It turns out to-day that Payne, in the Luzerne district, is defeated by Wright. This is a Republican loss. The vacancy for the same district, existing in the present Congress by the resignation of Judge Ketchum, is filled by Mr. Jones, a Republican. The gains are Harmer, in Philadelphia; Bayne, in Allegheny City; Errett, in Pittsburg; White, in Indiana County; Campbell, in Cambria County; Thompson, in Mercer County; Watson, in Erie County; Overton, in Bradford County, and Martling, in Schuylkill County. There is doubt about the election of Mahon over Stenger. The vote will be very close, and the result is not yet positively known. There is believed to be no doubt of a net gain of 8. The majorities cannot yet be given with any accuracy. Nutting's majority will be small, and perhaps it may wholly disappear; but it is hardly possible.

The Legislature is now Democratic by a small majority. The new Legislature will be Republican in the lower house by at least twenty, and in the Senate by six to eight. The most important gains for the lower house are ten in Allegheny County, four in Crawford, two in Venango, two in Washington, five in Luzerne, two in Delaware, and two in Franklin.

The Republicans have large gains in many of their counties, the principal being about as follows: Allegheny County, 2,500; Beaver, 700; Lawrence, 600; Indiana, 600; Blair, 400; Lancaster, 1,000; Chester, 1,000; Bradford, 600; Tioga, 1,000; Warren, 600. The large Democratic gains are, in Northumberland County, 1,000; Berks, 1,000; York, 500; Green, 700; Luzerne, 1,800. The majority on the Presidential ticket in Philadelphia will be about 16,000. It now looks as though the State, outside the city, would be about even, but the returns are not complete enough to warrant a statement by counties. The extent of the majority is of little consequence, since all the fruits of a great majority are gathered. The evidence is conclusive of a profuse expenditure of money by the Democrats throughout the State, and purposes of frauds which did not have much success, except in a few localities. The discovery of the fraudulent receipts, no doubt, prevented the State going for Tilden. There are some facts in relation to frauds, and the use of money by Democrats, which it will be profitable to examine when the excitement has further subsided.

THE RESULT ON CONGRESSMEN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BUTLER, Nov. 8.—Thompson, Rep., is elected in the Twenty-sixth Congressional District by 2,000 majority.

POTTSVILLE, Nov. 8.—Returns received up to noon indicate the election of Reilly, Dem., for Congress by 100 majority.

TOWANDA, Nov. 8.—The majority for Hayes in this county is 3,000. Col. Overton, for Congress, has 2,400 majority in the county, and 2,000 in the district.

WARREN, Nov. 8.—For Congress, Watson's majority in Warren County is 1,100, and in the district about 3,000.

ROCHESTER, Nov. 8.—Incomplete returns indicate the election of W. S. Shallenberger for Congress by a majority of 2,000 in the district.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—In the Seventeenth Congressional District, Campbell, Rep., has a majority of 581. This district is at present represented by a Democrat.

WELLSBORO, Nov. 8.—John I. Mitchell's majority for Congress will exceed 1,000 in this district.

MISCELLANEOUS RETURNS.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8—9:30 P. M.—Full returns from twenty-four counties in this State, including Philadelphia, show a net Republican gain of 2,499. This does not include Allegheny County.

The Republicans gain five members of the Legislature in the county, electing seven of the nine members.

Jones, Republican, is elected to the Congressional vacancy. Wright, Democrat, is elected to the forty-fifth Congress. The Republicans elect the District Attorney in this county, and probably Prothonotary. They also elect two State Senators, which is a gain of one.

Reilly, Dem., is elected to Congress from the Thirteenth District by a majority of 125.

VIRGINIA.

TILDEN'S MAJORITY OVER 30,000—EIGHT DEMOCRATIC CONGRESSMEN ELECTED.

RICHMOND, Nov. 8.—Incomplete returns from nearly every section indicate that Tilden's majority in the State will run over 30,000. The Democrats elect eight Congressmen, leaving one district—the Fourth—in doubt, with a very strong probability of the election of Jorgensen, Rep., over Hunton, Dem., in that district.

NORFOLK, Nov. 8.—Returns to-night assure the re-election of Goode, Dem., to Congress, from this district, by 2,000 majority.

NEW-JERSEY.

TILDEN'S MAJORITY, 8,000—REPUBLICAN GAIN OF ONE CONGRESSMAN—THE LEGISLATURE DEMOCRATIC IN BOTH BRANCHES.

The latest returns show that Tilden's majority in the State is much less than the Democrats first claimed, and instead of being 15,000 is probably not over 8,000. Gov. Bedle, Democrat, carried the State in 1875 by 13,233.

CONGRESS.

The Congressional delegation stands three Republicans and four Democrats, as follows:

1. Clement H. Sinnickson, Rep.*

4. Alvah A. Clark, Dem.
5. Augustus W. Cutler, Dem.*
6. Thomas B. Peddie, Rep.
7. Augustus A. Hardenburg, Dem.*

THE SENATE.

The Republicans elect their Senators in the Counties of Passaic (a gain) and Cape May. The Democrats carry both Middlesex and Hunterdon—both gains—Sussex and Burlington.

The Senate, as far as is known, is Democratic by 2, making a Democratic majority of 3 on a joint ballot. The Legislature will be very close.

THE COUNTY VOTES.

Atlantic County.—Hayes carries this county by 186, a Democratic gain of 218, as compared with 1872. Pugh, (Rep.,) for Congress gets 218 majority, a Republican gain of 17. Ashley, (Rep.,) is elected to the Assembly by 244, a Republican gain of 13. The whole Republican county ticket is elected by an average majority of 225.

Monmouth County.—The Republicans elect Leonard to the Assembly in the Third District of Monmouth County by 20 majority, a Republican gain of one Assemblyman and of 29 votes. The Democrats elect two Assemblymen. The official majorities in the county are—Tilden, 2,217; Ross, Dem., for Congress, 2,186.

Middlesex County, (official.)—Tilden's majority is 570; Ross, Dem., for Congress, has 480 majority; Ludlow, Dem., for State Senate, 725; Waldron, Dem., for Assembly, 285; Campbell, Dem., for Assembly, 100; Martin, Dem., for Assembly, 383. This county is a Democratic gain.

Essex County.—This county gives Hayes 1,941 majority, a Democratic gain of 3,039 over 1872, but a Republican gain of 1,679, on Congressmen, over 1874.

Passaic County. John W. Griggs, Rep., is re-elected to the Assembly from Paterson, instead of Stevenson, Dem., as first reported.

Hudson County.—Alexander M. Harris, Dem., is elected to the Assembly from the Fourth District of Hudson County, instead of H. Brandigam, Rep., as at first reported.

Morris County, (official.)—Tilden's majority is 30; Cutler's, Dem., for Congress, 176.

Union County.—Full returns from the City of Elizabeth show a Democratic gain of 350 on Mayor. The Republicans elect four Councilmen, and the Council and Board of Education stand the same as last year—Republicans 9, Democrats 7. The Democrats elect William E. Hoy Mayor by about 75 majority. The First Assembly District re-elect Egan, Dem., by a large majority. The Second District re-elects Cory, Rep., by about 70, and the Third District re-elects Vail, Rep., by 33. Elizabeth elects Democratic Freeholders, which will make the Board stand—Democrats 10, Republicans 7.

Cape May County.—This county has elected a Republican Senator and Assemblyman.

Burlington County.—Ridgway, Dem., for Senator, is elected, with two Democratic Assemblymen and one Republican, and one Assembly District remains in doubt.

Mercer County.—Hutchinson, Rep., for the Assembly, has been defeated by seven votes. The county now stands two Democrats and one Republican.

Pugh, Rep., is elected to Congress in the Second District by a majority of 500.

DELAWARE.

THE DEMOCRATIC MAJORITY IN THE STATE 2,600.

WILMINGTON, Nov. 8.—The Democratic majority in this State will reach 2,600.

ENTHUSIASM IN OHIO.

A MAJORITY FOR HAYES CLAIMED IN THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE — PERTINENT SPEECH BY THE NEXT PRESIDENT.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 8.—There is great excitement here over the announcement that Gov. Hayes is elected. His private secretary is sending out telegrams claiming a majority of one for Hayes in the Electoral College. High street, in front of the Republican head-quarters, is closely packed with thousands of people, all wild with excitement. In the midst of the general excitement, all efforts to obtain complete returns of the Ohio election by counties have signally failed. Thus far returns have only been received from nineteen counties. It is, however, conceded by both the State Committees that the Republican majority will be from 8,000 to 10,000.

After hearing the news at the Republican head-quarters, the crowd, numbering several thousand, formed into a procession and marched to Gov. Hayes' residence. In response to repeated calls Gov. Hayes appeared in the doorway and amid much cheering by the crowd spoke as follows:

MY FRIENDS: I assure you I am obliged for this hearty demonstration, but if you will keep quiet about half a moment, I will say something to you which I think it is my duty under the circumstances to say. While our present advices look favorable, we must remember that several of the States which have been considered doubtful, have a large territory remote from railroad or telegraphic communication, and it will naturally take some time to receive definite returns from them. I therefore take this call as an earnest of your loyalty to the Republican Party, and your desire for its success. If later advices should change the result from what it is announced at present I assure you I shall frequently recall this visit during the time I shall yet live among you, with pleasure. I bid you good night.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 8.—The vote in Hamilton stands as follows: Tilden, 29,468; Hayes, 28,770; Cooper 37; Smith, (Prohib.) 1.

ILLINOIS.

THE STATE REPUBLICAN BEYOND DOUBT—CULLOM ELECTED GOVERNOR BY 35,000 MAJORITY—A GAIN IN CONGRESSMEN.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8—11:30 A. M.—Returns have been received up to this hour from 461 towns and precincts in the State of Illinois, outside of the city of Chicago. Four hundred and twenty-six of these give Hayes 89,673; Tilden, 69,214. Thirty-five other towns, returning majorities only, give Tilden a majority of 461. These returns give Hayes a net majority of 21,021. Deducting 2,000 as the probable Democratic majority in the City of Chicago, and Hayes' net majority so far is 11,021. If the same ratio is kept up in the remainder of the State the majority will be, as compared with the vote of 1872, from 30,000 to 35,000. Cullom is undoubtedly elected Governor over the combined Democratic and Greenback vote. Gen. Farnsworth concedes the election of Lathrop, the regular Republican in the Fourth District, over himself and Hurlbut. Later returns from the Third District leave it in doubt between Le Moyne and Brentano.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—Complete returns from Cook County, except a few districts and Republican towns, gives Hayes 36,636; Tilden 38,648; Cooper 257. Cullom, Rep., for Governor, received 36,297, and Stewart, Dem., for Governor, 36,927. The remaining districts and towns will, it is claimed, almost certainly change the result to a small Republican majority in Cook County. The vote of the city of Chicago is: Hayes, 28,317; Tilden, 33,247; Cooper, 229.

The Tribune claims that the Republicans have elected their whole county ticket except Clough, the candidate for Sheriff. This claim is based on nearly complete returns in each case.

Receipts from 552 towns and precincts, outside the city of Chicago, give Hayes 110,262, Tilden 91,030; Hayes' majority 19,232. Fifty-three other towns return for Hayes a net majority of 913, making his majority 20,145. These towns show an increase in the aggregate vote of nearly fifty thousand over the vote for President in 1872.

Returns from the Congressional districts so far as received, show the election of Aldrich, Rep., in the First; Harrison, Dem., in the Second; Brentano, Rep., in the Third; Lathrop in the Fourth; Burchard, Rep., in the Fifth; Henderson, Rep., in the Sixth; Fort, Rep., in the Eighth; Wilson, Dem., in the Ninth; Marsh, Rep., in the Tenth; A. Springer, Dem., in the Twelfth; Cannon, Rep., in the Fourteenth; Morrison, Dem., in the Seventeenth; Wiley, Rep., in the Eighteenth; and the result in the Seventh, Eleventh, Thirteenth, Fifteenth, Sixteenth and Nineteenth in doubt. The Republicans have certainly gained three Congressmen and possibly four.

CAIRO, Nov. 8.—Returns from the Eighteenth Illinois District indicate the election of Wiley, Republican, for Congress.

INDIANA.

A MAJORITY OF SEVEN THOUSAND FOR TILDEN.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 8.—Returns from 389 townships and wards, which cast forty-three per cent. of the October vote, show Hayes ahead of Tilden 3,491, but which is a Democratic gain of 909. The same ratio of gain in the rest of the State would give Tilden 7,000 majority. Strong Democratic counties to hear from may increase this estimate. The townships not heard from gave 9,539 Democratic majority in October last.

MICHIGAN.

THE STATE CARRIED BY 20,000 MAJORITY—A LARGE MAJORITY ON JOINT BALLOT IN THE LEGISLATURE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

DETROIT, Nov. 8.—Further returns show at least twenty thousand majority for Hayes in this State, with the State ticket behind somewhat. The Legislature shows over fifty Republican majority on joint ballot, and we have carried every Congressional district except the First, which re-elects Williams, Democrat, by about twelve hundred majority.

DETROIT, Nov. 8.—Returns from 304 townships and five precincts in this city give Hayes a net majority of 12,025; a Democratic gain of 9,463 over 1872. The same towns give Coswell, Rep., for Governor a net majority of 6,631. Willits, Rep., for Congress in the Second District, has 708 majority; McGowan, Rep., for Congress in the Third District, has 741 majority. The Democrats claim the election of Williams in the First District by about 1,000.

Midnight.—Later returns indicate that the majority for Hayes in this State will be from 15,000 to 20,000. Crowell's majority for Governor will be somewhat less. The Legislature will be Republican by a majority of about 50 on joint ballot. The Republicans certainly have 7 out of 9 Congressional Districts. The Democrats elect Williams in the First District by about 100 majority. The Eighth District is claimed by both parties. Wayne County elects the entire Democratic ticket, with the exception of Durfee, Rep., who is elected Judge of the Probate Court, and possibly Coates, Rep., for Sheriff.

MINNESOTA.

A REPUBLICAN MAJORITY OF 15,000—A GAIN OF TWO REPUBLICAN CONGRESSMEN.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 8.—The total vote of St. Paul and Ramsey County gives Tilden a majority of 1,184, and Stewart, Rep., for Congress, 565 majority.

Minneapolis complete gives Hayes 335 majority and McNair, Dem., for Congress 355 majority.

The vote throughout the State, except in Ramsey County, generally shows Republican gains. Only about twenty of the seventy-two counties have yet made complete returns, but these, with fragmentary returns from other points, indicate that the Republican majority in the State will be from 15,000 to 18,000.

Dunnell, Rep., is elected in the First District by from 5,000 to 7,000 majority. Strait is elected in the Second District by 5,000 majority, and Stewart, in the Third, by 1,000 majority.

IOWA.

FIFTY-FIVE THOUSAND MAJORITY—REPUBLICAN GAIN OF ONE CONGRESSMAN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

DES MOINES, Nov. 8.—Thirty counties thus far heard from give majorities for Hayes amounting to 20,903, and two counties give Tilden 2,250. The net Republican majority is 18,882, a gain of 8,829 over the vote of last year. The remaining counties, upon the same proportionate gain, will make Hayes' majority 53,000. All the Congressmen elected are Republicans.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

DES MOINES, Nov. 8.—Returns from seven counties, and twenty-two precincts in others, show a majority for Hayes of 9,367, a Republican gain of 4,727. The State will go at least 55,000 Republican. Every precinct shows a Republican gain.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—Returns from 130 Iowa towns, in sixty-seven counties, show a Republican gain of 5,869, and a Democratic gain of 341.

MISSOURI.

RETURNS FROM ALL PARTS OF THE STATE—THE VOTE IN ST. LOUIS COUNTY—A GAIN OF THREE CONGRESSMEN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 8.—We have carried two out of the three St. Louis Congressmen, and the county ticket. CHAUNCEY I. FILLEY.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 8.—Up to 4 o'clock this morning only fifty of the seventy-nine precincts had completed the count. These precincts give Tilden 12,800, and Hayes 11,896; Phelps, Dem., for Governor, 10,229; Finkelnburg, Rep., 16,262; Thomas, Rep., for Sheriff, 11,122; Brown, Dem., 8,683. COLORADO LEGISLATURE.

GOVERNOR ROUTT'S INAUGURATION.

CEREMONIES OF THE OCCASION—CHIEF POINTS OF THE MESSAGE OF THE GOVERNOR—HIS RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE LEGISLATURE.

DENVER, Friday Nov. 3, 1876.

The new State Government was inaugurated day with befitting ceremonies. The General Assembly met in joint session, and the oath of office was administered to the officers elect, after which Governor Routt delivered his Message. The following is a synopsis: Under the head of State finances he shows outstanding warrants and other liabilities to be $50,000 resources from delinquent taxes, and from taxes available January and July, 1877, $73,000, leaving $23,000 to meet the current expenses of the State until 1878. A large part of the outstanding indebtedness arises from the special appropriations made by the last session of the Territorial Legislature for educational institutions and Centennial purposes. To provide for the present exigency a tax levy of three mills is recommended. By the act of Congress, Sept. 4, 1841, each new State on being admitted is granted 500,000 acres of land for the purposes of internal improvement. The Enabling act also grants to the State fifty sections "for the purpose of erecting public buildings at the capital for legislative and judicial purposes," fifty other sections "for the purpose of erecting a suitable building for a Penitentiary or State Prison," seventy-two sections "for the use and support of a State university," and twelve salt springs, with "six sections of land adjoining," for the use of the State, making in all, with the 500,000 acres first mentioned, 655,160 acres. The Governor recommends that the Legislature appoint five gentlemen to locate these lands; and urges that they be withheld from sale for a few years, to avoid the error of most of the Northwestern States of too hastily placing their lands in the market, thus losing the advantages arising from the natural growth and improvement of the country.

On the subject of Education, Gov. Routt says:

"The increase of the school population during the past year has been about ten per cent., making a total of 24,108 persons of school age. The increase in the value of school property has been correspondingly large, by reason of the erection of new school buildings and additions to others. The southern portion of the State has contributed largely to this increase, and many of the schools have been furnished with maps, charts, globes, and other requisites, affording indisputable evidence of the interest and zeal felt in the maintenance of our public schools."

The Governor adds:

"I would recommend for your consideration the adoption of a system of compulsory education, and that the amount of funds to which each school district shall be entitled shall depend upon the average attendance and the number of days on which school shall be held during the year. If the law be so amended, most of the defects now existing, and the evils arising therefrom, will in my judgment be remedied. While our school system is by no means all that could be desired, yet Colorado is entitled to special honor, in that she enters the Union with a better developed and more liberally supported school system than was possessed by the other States at the times of their admission."

Irrigation is a matter of much importance to the citizens of Colorado, and the Governor says:

"In some sections the water supply is wholly inadequate to the wants of the people, and to remedy this deficiency, I would recommend that some general system may be adopted by your honorable body, so that the waters of the larger streams may be made, by means of suitable reservoirs and canals, to subserve the interests of mining, agriculture, and manufactures. The filling of these reservoirs during times of high water, in Spring and early Summer, would work no injury to farms along the streams, while from the supply thus obtained large arid tracts of country, with no natural water-courses, could be reclaimed and made productive."

He recommends that the Legislature memorialize Congress for a grant of lands sufficient to enable the State to accomplish this desirable object.

On the subject of grasshoppers the Governor says:

"I would strongly urge a reasonable appropriation to be expended, as your honorable body may direct, in the investigation of the history, haunts, and means of exterminating this insect, and also that you by statute prohibit the destruction of insectivorous birds."

The value of a Board of Health in promoting and caring for the public health, and in disseminating information regarding the diseases and climatology of Colorado, is urged, and an appropriation asked. On mines and mining the Governor says:

"The present product of gold and silver bullion and ores amounts to nearly eight millions of dollars annually. With the prospect of early railroad communication with the south-western portion of the State, by which the people of the San Juan country will be enabled to add the product of the marvelously rich silver mines of that region to the yield of the mines of the north, we may reasonably expect that the amount exported will be increased to at least ten millions of dollars in the next year. An interest upon which the future wealth and prosperity of the people so much depends should receive every encouragement at your hands."

Laws for the proper ventilation of mines, prohibiting the employment of children under twelve years of age in them, proper drainage, preservation of the records and evidence of pre-emption and other titles to mines, and also the better protection of the locator in the rights of discovery, are recommended.

"I would especially recommend that you authorize the settlement, by boards of arbitration, of controversies regarding titles to mining properties, and thus save the contestants long and expensive litigation in the courts. This method, if adopted, would, in my judgment, have the effect of increasing public confidence, and inducing large investments in this class of property."

On the codification of laws the Governor says:

"Complaint is made that under our present mode of procedure in the courts, business in civil cases is delayed and carried from term to term by the interposition of vexations and sham defenses, so that it frequently requires two years to collect the value of a plain promissory note. Besides the injury which business suffers from this slow and defective system, counties are burdened with a heavy and unnecessary expense. This calls for remedy at your hands. Whether the object can be best effected by a modification of our present system, or by the adoption of what is known as a civil code, which prevails in a majority of the States, is for you to determine. I would also recommend that you provide for a thorough revision and codification of all our statutes."

DEATH OF A STALLION.

The Toledo (Ohio) Blade says: "On Thursday last the splendid stallion, 'Mansfield Golddust,' owned by Mr. H. M. Locke, of Adams township, died very suddenly. Mansfield Golddust was one of the finest horses in the State. He was sixteen hands high, well muscled, very stylish and symmetrical in form, with fine trotting action. He took the first premium at the Ohio State Fair in 1872 over eighteen stallions of all ages, and has taken first premiums wherever exhibited since he was two years old, being six in all. Although a very large horse, he trotted to sulky in 2:27, and colts of his get have trotted one mile in 2:22, while Fleety Golddust has a record of 2:16¾. The death of this animal will be a loss, not only to the owner alone, but to all who are interested in the improvement of stock in this section."

IS NOT VIRGINIA DEMOCRATIC?

The State of Virginia has been for some time under Democratic rule. We know their professions, and yet in the Lynchburg Virginian of the Seventh District we read: "A gentleman resident in this city went to Richmond last week to collect a claim due for service rendered the State, and was put off with the assurance that there was not a dollar in the Treasury. Can people, under these circumstances, hesitate to-day between having a cheaper Government or higher taxes? One or the other is inevitable."

AN OBJECTIONABLE JOKE.

A telegram from Virginia City, Nevada, says that great excitement was caused on C street in that city a few nights ago by a man who gathered a large crowd under the pretext of liberating some rats from a box, for a dog to kill. About three hundred men gathered about the spot, when a pole-cat sprang from the box and began to disperse the crowd. The man made his escape, but was hunted all night by a gang with six-shooters. So great was the indignation that he was compelled to flee the city. About a hundred persons had their clothes ruined.

AN INCIDENT.

The Boston Transcript relates this: "It was on Thursday evening at a South Boston caucus of the Democratic persuasion. A candidate for a minor office had just been nominated, and was called upon to respond. 'I'm not much of a speaker,' he said, 'but if you'll call round at the house to-morrow night you shall have all you want to drink, and I'll roast an ox whole,' whereupon a sovereign rose in the rear of the hall, and remarked, 'Mr. Speaker, I object to Friday. The heft of the Democratic don't eat meat on that day.'

DEATH OF A CONGRESSMAN'S DAUGHTER.

The Lewiston (Me.) Journal says: "The youngest daughter of Hon. William P. Frye (Miss Emma S.) died very suddenly at Stamford, Conn., on Monday morning. She was thirteen years of age, and had been at Stamford attending school. The remains of the deceased will reach this city Tuesday, accompanied by the afflicted parents. Mrs. Frye reached Stamford just before her daughter's death, but Mr. Frye was hardly aware of his daughter's illness before a closely following dispatch announced her death. Mr. Frye has been addressing the Republicans of Massachusetts during the past few days."

A STRANGE MANIA.

A WOMAN WHO WAS ADDICTED TO LITIGATION—JUDGMENT OF A JURY REGARDING HER SANITY.

From the Louisville Courier-Journal, Nov. 6.

Among the numerous curiosities of alleged lunacy that have for several years existed among the people of Louisville, there is one known particularly among the legal fraternity. For three years past she has been a pest and annoyance to them, but on account of her age, sex, and poverty-stricken condition has been humored to the extent of her whims by them. The party in question is Annie Davis, a thin, spare-made, raw-boned, keen-eyed specimen of a female. The kind of monomania with which poor Annie Davis has been afflicted is, perhaps, seldom known to exist; but it has by degrees developed in her system until, like a full-blown rose, it has blossomed in all directions. It is a monomania for litigation, and of that class of litigation known as damage suits. She has never sued for $1,000 damages. Not even $10,000 would content her. She must have $100,000 or nothing to revenge the wrongs and insults which may have been heaped upon her, and the court records of to-day bear witness to a half dozen suits which have been entered for sums ranging from $10,000 upward. She has been in the Work-house, but, under the agony of shame, disgrace, and cruelty, she has sought to destroy the judge who sent her there, and the keeper who confined her, while even the city of Louisville has not been left out in the cold. Annie Davis first became known in the courts through a suit for alleged rape, which she filed against a former Main-street merchant, asking heavy damages. That suit has been pending about four years. Since then her appetite has been sharpened, and now altogether about eight suits for damages brought by her are docketed in the Common Pleas and Circuit Courts. She has tried to employ nearly every lawyer in the city to prosecute her cases, but having once become known to them, she has found it exceedingly difficult to obtain counsel. The Judges have been very lenient and kind toward her, and have assigned and re-assigned her cases, but she always complains that her witnesses (those of her imagination) will not come to time; that the court is against her, and that the officers of the court are placing obstacles in her path to prevent her bringing her cases to a successful issue. For hours she sat in the clerk's offices nervously fingering law papers, and scribbling off a few words under the hallucination that she was writing a petition for a suit or an affidavit, or some document to be filed in one of her suits. She has, it seems, had moments of frenzy, and once shot at a policeman, wounding him in a finger, while at another time she came very near crippling a prominent lawyer who was defending the gentleman sued for alleged rape. A short time ago Gen. Basil Duke, Commonwealth's Attorney, filed an information of lunacy against her, and since she has threatened to sue him and the court for $100,000 damages for malicious prosecution. Every whim has been gratified in this case until it came to trial Saturday. Witnesses were present who testified to her lunacy on the question of litigation. The jury impanneled, after hearing the case, brought in a verdict that she was a monomaniac on litigation, but that no cause could be assigned for her lunacy. No restraint had ever been imposed upon her, except confinement to her own room. Further, she has exhibited periodical moments of frenzy, followed by lucid intervals, and during the prevalence of this frenzy she showed violence and a propensity to mischief. Through her lawyer, Jeff. Brown, she moved for a new trial.

ON AN UPTURNED SKIFF.

The Leavenworth (Kansas) Times of the 5th instant says: "Last Tuesday morning about 3 o'clock Mr. A. Rambo, who lives near Iatan, was aroused by cries of distress coming apparently from the river, the voice being that of a woman. He unfastened a skiff moored near his house, and rowed out in the direction of the sounds, which seemed to grow fainter. He called loudly and in answer heard a faint call considerably below the point where he first heard it. Following as rapidly as he could, he soon came in sight of a dark object floating down the river, which he overhauled, and discovered to be two skiffs lashed together, and bottom side up, and the form of a woman clinging to them. She called to him 'for God's sake to be quick' as she was nearly exhausted. Mr. Rambo pulled alongside the floater, and discovered further that she was holding to one of the skiffs with one hand, and with the other clutching firmly the hair of a man's head, which she was with heroic nerve trying to keep above the waves. After much difficulty the inanimate form of the man was taken into the skiff, into which the woman followed, and not stopping to secure the boats, they made for the shore, where the man was taken out and found to be insensible. Restoratives were procured, and after several hours' hard work, life was restored, the parties being kept at the residence of their rescuer until the latter part of the week, when they were, by means of a subscription raised, sent to their friends in Forest City. They gave their names as G. Foster and wife, and said that they, in company with a man whose name we failed to learn, had started from Omaha in the two skiffs for some point down the river. Several miles above Iatan, about 10 o'clock on Monday night, the boats struck a snag and were overturned. The stranger was drowned at once, and in the attempt to save him Mr. Foster became so exhausted as to sink, but was close enough to the boats, to which his wife was hanging, to be caught by her, but being unable to change her position, she was compelled to float down in the wild waste of waters, expecting to meet death every instant, until she was heard and rescued."

THE TILDEN FAMILY.

A Boston paper of Tuesday contains the following communication:

Elder Nathaniel Tilden belonged to the wealthiest class of the early settlers of the Old Colony. He came from Tenterdon, near Crainbrook, Kent, with his wife Lydia and seven children and seven servants, and settled in Scituate before 1628. He was one of an old family, whose ancestry are traced back to the middle ages, and one of them, Sir Richard Tylden, was knighted for bravery by Richard of the Lion Heart. He had served with that King in his famous crusade against the Saracens. His ancestry were among the "men of Kent;" so celebrated in English history as men of gallantry, loyalty, and courtly manners. He had been accustomed to elegancies of life in England, a man of good education and easy fortune. He left a home in England altogether enviable, save in the single circumstance of the abridgment of his religious liberty. Among the descendants of Elder Nathaniel Tilden's daughters are found such men as the Laphams, Curtises, Ticknors, Cushings, Brigges, Stetsons, and the gallant Commodore Preble, and a host of other eminent men in the various professions of life.

GRACE TILDEN.

EAST BRIDGEWATER.

PROVIDENCE AND THE SCOTCH HARVEST.

At the meeting of the established Synod of Angus recently, an overture was presented praying the Synod to appoint a day on which the thoughts of the congregation might be directed to the dealings of God with the harvest, which has now been on hand for nearly three months, and is not yet completed. The Rev. Mr. Anderson, in supporting the overture, said it would be well for ministers to call the attention of their people to indications of dissatisfaction with their conduct shown by the Ruler of the Seasons. The Rev. Mr. Young said it was a very difficult subject indeed to try and read the decrees of Divine Providence as expressed by prosperity and adversity. On the East coast of Scotland the harvest had been almost a failure, while on the West coast fine weather had prevailed and the harvest was a good one. Were they to infer from this that the Almighty was dissatisfied with the inhabitants on the East coast and pleased with those on the West? It was ultimately agreed to fix the first Sabbath in November on which ministers shall call the attention of congregations to the dealings of God with the bad harvest

AN EXCLUSIVE PRISON.

The Montreal Witness says: "Last week a Cabinet meeting of the local Government was held, at which the difficulties in the way of providing accommodation for female prisoners of both religions in the new jail were discussed, and extraordinary to say, the decision arrived at was that only Roman Catholics should be placed in it, the Protestant females to be sent as before to the present common jail. Mr. Payette, the jailer, is now awaiting orders for the removal of the seventy-two Roman Catholic female prisoners now in his charge to their new quarters, and expects to have them sent away some day this week, the new jail in Fullum street being all ready for their reception, and the Sisters of Providence in charge. There are at present sixteen Protestant female prisoners in the old jail who will have to remain there subject to all the inconveniences and discomforts of that antiquated institution. This is a most remarkable arrangement. The Fullum street prison was built with the people's money, and the Protestants in the Province are pro rata equally interested with their Roman Catholic fellow-citizens in the benefits to be derived from it."

A WIFE POISONER.

A telegram from Caldwell, Ohio, of the 4th inst., to the Cincinnati Times, says: "The jury in the case of Ohio vs. Nicholas King, for poisoning his wife, returned a verdict this evening of manslaughter, and King escapes with the Penitentiary. The sentence will be given, perhaps, Monday. This case has occupied ten days in the trial, and, while there is no doubt that King poisoned his wife with strychnia, he escapes the gallows. No person has ever been hanged in Ohio for poisoning."

THE FASHIONS.

STYLES AND SUGGESTIONS.

THE FEATURE OF THE DRESS OF THE PERIOD—THE BRETON MODE—FRINGES AND ORNAMENTS—LATEST WALKING SUITS—UNDERGARMENTS AND FOOT-WEAR.

The great feature of the dress of the period consists in the garments being tightly drawn over the hips and bust. If the body has any freedom of movement the toilet is no longer fashionable; the scarf must be taken back above the knees as tightly as possible. Great changes have necessarily been made in ladies undergarments; these changes are explained below.

The suits are trimmed with as much fringe and scarf drapings as they will bear Most suits are made of materials in small designs. Bright colors are intermixed with brown and other dark shades in woolen goods. Such combinations as carombier with brown, and cream color with black, are used for aprons and scarfs. Formerly only one or two colors were worn during the season, and the same rule was applicable to the cut of the garments. This is fortunately no longer the case. Those who like black can wear black, and those who prefer colors can indulge in their use, although many ladies do not consider colored dresses in good taste, especially for street wear. The most widely adopted combinations are two kinds of material in dark shades. Complete suits will be made this Winter for occasions of all kinds. The beauty of these suits will depend upon the proper combination of shades. Imitation laces are employed by the most fashionable ladies for puffing over the train and for other parts of the toilet, the handsome real laces are reserved for the aprons and to trim the waist, sleeves, fichus, and those parts of the dress where lace will have proper care. Many new designs in imitation laces have been made for this purpose.

The "Breton" style is now all the rage. There is not a single Parisian dress-maker's establishment in which there is not the greatest variety of "Breton" costumes to be seen. There is also a tunic bretonne, with a large plait raised à la paysanne, and a "veste bretonne." The tunique is flat in front and upon the sides, and forms in the back a large hollow plait upon which are several small plaits. This part is then raised in puffs and sustained by a broad, flat trimming, with each end ornamented with a line of mother-of-pearl buttons, or any other kind of flat button. The place for the pockets is marked by bound bands of the principal material. The "veste bretonne" consists of a long cuirass with a vest; this cuirass is sewed on one side and hooked on the other. The vest is rather shorter; it is trimmed with flat bands like those upon the tunique, and bound. The lay-down collar is surmounted by a double line of buttons. The fronts of the "veste bretonne" and also the front of the vest are ornamented with groups of from six to nine buttons. The round sleeves are trimmed with bound bands adorned with buttons. As may be seen, the cut of this suit is not very complicated, and is something quite new. It is generally made of plain goods, such as handsome vigogne in colors such as brown, dark blue, and dark green. The trimmings most used are woolen embroideries, mohair galloon, and velvet, with folds in the same shade falling below the borders. A suitable combination is bottle-green vigogne with bands of black velvet surrounded by red bindings. The buttons are of greenish mother-of-pearl.

The rich fringes now in use are a great improvement to suits; they include chenille, silk, and satin balls. These balls are sometimes in all colors, such as white, yellow, red, and pale blue. They enliven black fringes very much; the colors of the balls are in the principal shades of the suit. Deep checked fringes are now much worn, they are dotted with silver, gold, or bright-colored silk. Two very pretty costumes have been trimmed with this fringe, One is dark green cachemire, trimmed with green fringe dotted with very light green; this suit is ornamented with hundreds of small light green buttons. The other is in exactly the same style, made of black drap de soie and trimmed with small cherry-colored buttons.

A beautiful plum-colored plaited faille walking suit has the front of the skirt trimmed with a deep plaiting; this plaiting is left loose about two inches from the border. The train is trimmed with seven small plaited flounces. The gray faconné apron is trimmed with eight narrow plum-colored faille folds or galloon. It is cut open upon the sides, showing the entire upper part of the skirt. The apron is joined on the back of the skirt under large faille loops and a bow with ends. The aumoniere is cut in angle shape and trimmed with narrow faille folds and fringe. The waist has a long basque, cut straight in front, and lies flat all the way down; it is tight fitting in the back, and much shorter than the front. The back of the waist is ornamented with a faille bow, and down the side over the hips fall two scarfs trimmed with fringe. The basque is open in the middle of the back and joined by passementerie bands. Upon the neck, down the front of the waist, and bordering the basque are bias folds. The back of the waist is adorned with an "écharpe capuchon," made of faille and trimmed with a passementerie cord and tassel. The sleeves are trimmed up the outside seams with close faille folds; at the wrist they are finished with a double faille cuff.

Another walking suit has a black velvet skirt trimmed with a deep gathered flounce, surmounted by a trimming made of a fulled piece of faille drawn through loops; above the flounce is a heading. The armure-polonaise is trimmed with fur; the front forms an apron rather shorter than the back; it is trimmed with bands of passementerie finished at both ends with buttons. These bands graduate toward the waist, where they simply form a button and a short loop. Up the middle of the front are faille folds. The back is perfectly plain with a band taken across toward the centre of the dress and drawn tightly enough to form a small puff in the back. Up the side are small faille folds, and around the bottom is a deep fur trimming. Large black velvet revers open in front in vest shape over the plain waist. The neck trimming consists of fur. On each side of the revers are two loops crossing each other, and fastening over passementerie buttons. Up the outside seams of the sleeves are faille folds with buttons and loops on the sides. The cuffs have three narrow folds on the outside, and three buttons. The muff corresponds with the fur trimming upon the border of the garment. The Louis XIV. toque, a kind of turban hat, has a fur border; the crown is trimmed with a faille plaited rosette, and a long feather falls down the back.

A pretty and very new model for a visiting dress is made in the following manner: The material is black faille. The short-train skirt is trimmed with a flounce which is higher in the back than in the front, where it is surmounted by a puffing with the border trimmed with a plaiting. The heading is lined with blue. The tunique is draped in the back and supported at the top by a scarf trimmed with blue lace and cardinal red fringe. The two ends of the scarf are joined upon the side, and the pocket is placed above the parts joined. One of the ends falls square under the pocket, and over this end fall loops of black ribbons. The cuirass has five seams in the back. The basque is trimmed with two folds, one blue and the other red. Around the neck is the same combination of blue and red lace and fringe. The sleeves are trimmed with a large double cornet-shaped cuff, trimmed with blue lace; a red ribbon bow is on the outside. The linen lingerie is embroidered on the borders. The black velvet capote matching the suit has a soft crown and a Marie Stuart brim, trimmed with a band of pale blue feathers. On the top of the crown and in the back are red roses. The mentonniere barbes are of white English blonde.

A rich evening toilet may be of blue faille and burned-corn-colored damassé. The blue faille skirt is trimmed with a narrow flounce; above is a deep puffing. The damassé tunique scarf is taken slanting to the left hip, where it is drawn together and fastened under a bunch of flowers. A single square flap forms the train over the back. This scarf is trimmed with a deep fringe surmounted by a wreath of roses and leaves. The blue faille pocket is shirred and trimmed with a shell-shaped white lace trimming. It is placed on the blue skirt on the left side, above the scarf. The blue tunique has a damassé front piece with flowers and lace trimmings up both sides. This same trimming extends over the shoulders. The small, short sleeves are arranged in shell-shaped plaitings, falling one over the other.

Relating to the changes that are made in ladies' under-garments, instead of drawers the chemises are cut in Arab style, forming drawers in the lower part, and these are slightly fulled and trimmed with a band of insertion and lace. These chemises are made of fine batiste and trimmed with embroidered insertions and valenciennes lace, to wear under evening dresses. The plain petticoat worn under evening skirts is no longer fastened at the waist, but on the lower part of the corset, underneath or on the very edge of the outside. Against this is sewed a bread piece of tape, through which holes are worked with white cotton. A similar band is sewed to the fine white petticoat, which is cut to fit tightly over the hips in the same shape as the skirt of the dress, but a few inches shorter. In the back of the petticoat, about as high up as the knee, there must be a shirring, which draws the fullness back from the hips. On this shirr there is a deep flounce, which is very scant when the skirt is open, and falls full in fan-shape when the cords are drawn. There are no elegant trains or demi-trains made without this petticoat. The back can also have small ruffles to form the tournure. This, however, depends upon the shape of the skirt; but the cut and manner of fastening the skirt to the lower border of the corset must not be changed. This arrangement of worked eyelets has been found the least clumsy over the hips. The skirt is laced to the corset by means of strong silk lacet. Many ladies also adopt for the train skirt the deep manzouck flounce, striped with "torchon" lace insertions. This flounce is laced on to the plain skirt, and is consequently easy to change.

Among the great variety of collars now in use, those must be selected which are best suited to the shape of the neck. A long, thin neck ought to be surrounded by a full standing lingerie; ruchings are especially suitable for this purpose. If the neck is short, falling parures are more suitable, with large bands to give free movement to the neck. For the turned-down collars the bands should be narrow, as they are generally placed upon bands which are too wide, and consequently do not sit. Among these collars there is a very pretty style with small, closely plaited organdi ruffles; these, with a corresponding necktie, are both elegant and becoming. Mirecourt lace also trims these collars very prettily.

The way in which modistes employ chenille upon bonnets is quite original and neat. Take for instance a bonnet with a white felt brim and a soft black velvet crown. Around the brim is a large red and black chenille twist. On one side are two feathers, one red and the other black, and a black velvet bow with a silver glided or fanciful ornament of any sort. The broad black velvet strings are bordered with chenille like that upon the brim of the bonnet. The bonnet ornaments are of gold, or silver, and mostly of steel. They are in the shape of stars, swords, keys and rings. Satin bonnets now made, have light trimmings, such as lace and feathers. Pink satin makes a very dressy bonnet.

Ladies are more particular than ever about the neat appearance of their feet. The silk stockings are worn in the colors of the toilet, or of the trimming upon the dress. They are sometimes plain, and sometimes striped. When the legs are large, stockings striped lengthwise are worn, and when small, stockings striped latitudinally are to be preferred. There are also stockings with crossed stripes, in imitation of antique cathurne, and tied about the middle of the leg; these have a very peculiar effect. Black silk stockings are made in many ways; sometimes they are worked in colors; sometimes part of the stocking is in a bright or contrasting color, and covered with fine stripes in another shade. This style covers the upper part of the foot, the side extending quite high up on the leg, in a sharp point. Gaiters and shoes for dressy purposes leave nothing to be desired in point of elegance. The Louis XV. gaiters have very high heels and bands across the front, showing the stockings underneath. The "Souler Fenelon" with a large black ribbon bow, and sometimes a bright buckle, also shows the stocking to advantage. The Pompadour slipper is made of velvet or satin and embroidered with silk, gold, silver or steel; it is also ornamented with knots of ribbon and lace. Such are the different shoes gaiters, and slippers now worn.

THANKSGIVING.

PROCLAMATION BY GOV. TILDEN.

The unfailing mercies of God, of which another year has given witness, call us to renew our acknowledgment of Him in thanksgiving and prayer.

We are specially reminded of His protection, in the absence of any great disaster or calamity throughout the Commonwealth; and of His bounty, in the large and generous returns of nature.

Let us rejoice in the spirit of order and of charity and of hopefulness which has pervaded all classes under the depression in the industries and trade, and in the growth of public sentiment toward wise and humane methods of dealing with want and suffering. Let us give thanks for the maintenance of our social and religious institutions in their integrity, and improve the Divine blessing upon all efforts in behalf of good government and a true morality.

In common with the people of the other States of the Union, we recall, at this time, the blessings which we hold by inheritance. It becomes us, with them, to gratefully and humbly acknowledge the God of our fathers, whose mercies have been from generation to generation, beseeching Him for the continuance of His favor to the nation of His planting, that he may not "deliver our glory unto another."

I do, therefore, set apart and appoint Thursday, the 30th day of November, recommending to the people that on that day they put aside their usual employments, and in their homes and in their respective places of worship, render thanks to Almighty God for His mercies to us as individuals and as a State.

Done at the Capitol, in the City of Albany, this sixth day of November, in the year of our [L.S.] Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six.

SAMUEL J. TILDEN.

A THIEF'S JUMP.

The Cleveland (Ohio) Leader of Tuesday says: "A lady stopping at the Forest City House, returned to her room, which she had left unlocked for a few minutes, last evening, and saw a colored man in it. With a singular presence of mind she locked the door, and notified the clerk, who repaired to the room. Opening it he found the man had gone, whither he was unable to tell, unless an open window could solve the mystery. Subsequent events led to the belief that the man must have become so afraid of capture that he risked a flying leap out of the window, the room being on the third floor. About the time he was locked in, a couple of men in Solomonson's optician store on Superior street saw a colored man come dashing down through their awning, feet first, and with so much force that he ripped a hole clear through it, and landed in a sitting posture on the pavement. They captured him and asked him what he meant by shooting down like a meteor out of the sky. He replied that he had jumped out of the second-floor window, but was unable to tell what he meant by taking so short a cut to the pavement. The men finally let him go. He sat on a box for a few moments, and then proceeded slowly down the street, limping as he went. He was subsequently arrested while sitting on a box on Seneca street. He gave his name as Moses Robinson, said he lived at the rear of No. 410 Perry street, and was twenty-seven years of age, but denied the jumping entirely. He was identified by parties who saw him as being the party who took the leap. At the time of the jump he had a dressed chicken under one arm and a dozen and a half eggs in one pocket. Only three of the latter were broken. As $38 was missing from the room in the hotel, Robinson was charged with being a suspicious person. He was locked up in the Central."

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE OF SATANTA.

The St. Louis Republican of Monday says: "Mr. Frank Von Duzen, book-keeper of the Texas State Penitentiary at Huntsville, is at the Laclede, en route to Washington. He reports that Satanta, the celebrated Kiowa chief, who is under sentence for life, made an ineffectual attempt last week to end his life by suicide. The chief has been in a depressed and melancholy state of mind, chafing under the restraint of prison life. He has been allowed to walk within the limits of the yard, up to the picket line, being placed among the 'trusties,' who are allowed a certain freedom from restraint. Watching his opportunity, he procured a small rope, and, fastening one end to a scantling, tied the other end about his neck, and was caught dangling, with his feet about twenty-four inches from the ground, but was cut down before life was extinct. Satanta's companion, Little Bull, a Comanche chief, is enduring his imprisonment with a more cheerful spirit. Both chiefs were brought into the presence of Gov. Hubbard, during the recent visit of the latter to the Prison. Satanta made a request for some whisky to revive his drooping spirits. Two glasses half filled with a mild dilution were prescribed for the Indian braves, when Satanta, snatching up Little Bull's glass, said—'Whisky no good for papoose—good for big chief,' and pouring the contents into his own glass, gulped down both portions, and then smacked his lips in contentment. There are about two thousand Penitentiary convicts, only about four hundred of whom are regular inmates of the Prison. The other 1,600 are rented out to the railroads and the farmers. Convicts are hired out to farmers at $15 per month, the State furnishing clothes and shoes. The gangs working on railroads are leased from the State at $1 a day per head. The system of leasing is said to be working well, and is self-supporting."

PUBLIC BEQUESTS.

The will of Joseph F. Huntress, late of Boston, who died Oct. 30, contains the following items: After providing for the payment of his debts and several legacies, he gives the residue of his property in trust for the benefit of his wife and daughter during their lives, and on the event of their death the estate No. 377 Harrison avenue and No. 1 Gloucester place, Boston, together with the sum of $20,000, is devised to the City of Gloucester, his native place, "for the purpose of establishing or supporting a home for indigent females of sixty years of age, or over, natives of Gloucester, for a perpetual home." Upon the death of his wife, a sum of $12,000 is given in trust for one of his grand-daughters during her life, and on her decease five thousand dollars is given to the city of Gloucester for a perpetual fund, the interest of which is "to be applied to the furnishing of books and stationery for the use of poor children whose parents are too poor to provide them." The other seven thousand is given to the same city for a perpetual fund, the interest of which is "to be applied to the relief of poor widows and their children, whose husbands and fathers have gained a settlement in Gloucester by paying seven years' taxes." To the Trustees of the Home for Aged Men, in Boston, five thousand dollars; to the Trustees of the Home for Aged Women, in Boston, five thousand dollars; to the Trustees for the Sailors' Home, or Snug Harbor, located at Quincy, Mass., five thousand dollars; to the Seamen's, Fishermen's, Widows' and Orphans' Aid Society, in Gloucester, all the rest and residue of his estate, for distribution among the widows, according to their several needs.

—A. K. Loring has sold over 40,000 of Helen's Babies, and is now bringing out in similar shape A Lost Love, by Ashford Owen. —English History in Short Stories is a small 16 mo. book, published by Little, Brown & Co., and written by a lady past three score and ten years. It is a compendium of information about England, its history, Government, and antiquities, and contains sketches of each of the English Monarchs down to the present time and estimates of their historical importance, and is a very serviceable book for those who do not have access to libraries.

—The Athenæum says that the many proofs of his admiration for Miss Austin's novels, which are to be found in the letters of Lord Macaulay, have led to a renewed demand for her writings, and that Mr. Bentley has found the sale of his well-printed and convenient edition very much increased. It adds that there is some hope for English fiction if Pride and Prejudice, Emma, and Mansfield Park, regain popularity. Those who are familiar with them will not tolerate the vulgar, flashy novels of the present day.

—Prof. Masson has sent to press the third and fourth volumes of The Life and Times of John Milton, embracing the history of the Commonwealth down to the Restoration, together with the life and Secretaryship of Milton, through the whole period, and an elucidated account of the entire series of his State Letters for the Commonwealth, under Oliver and Richard Cromwell. The volumes not only deal most fully with Milton as a man, but hold high rank as the history of the leading personages and events of that stirring time.

—D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, promise a new and very elegant quarto edition of The Still Hour, by Prof. Austin Phelps, of Andover—a book which has had a larger sale than any other devotional work by an American author. They have also brought out an edition of Palmer's History of the Jewish Nation, a valuable work for family libraries and Bible students, edited by Rev. D. S. F. Smith, and are soon to issue a gay and dainty volume for little children, Classics of Babyland, being the old nursery tales done into verse by Mrs. Clara Doty Bates.

—Capt. Shaw's new work on Fire Protection is just published in London by Messrs. Layton, who have in press the third volume of the Insurance Cyclopedia. Capt. Shaw says in his preface that his object is to "convey to those interested in the business of extinguishing fires the necessary information concerning the organization, training, and duties of firemen, and all the appliances which they have or ought to have in use." The book is of such a practical character that some publisher will find it a profitable investment to bring out an edition in this country.

—The late Mr. Pike, of Salem, Mass., an intimate personal friend of Nathaniel Hawthorne, wrote an interesting sketch of his life, which was withheld from the public at the request of Mr. Hawthorne's family. Though drawn by a friendly hand, it contained much that was considered uncanny. The late Increase S. Hill, who was also a personal friend of Hawthorne, read the sketch and thought it truthful and just. Neither regarded the great novelist as patriotic in his sentiments during the rebellion. He sneered at President Lincoln, while he sympathized with the rebels, but was too lazy or timid to repeat in public what he said and felt in private.

—Protestant Leaders is the title of a series of Sunday evening discourses by John W. Chadwick, Pastor of the Second Unitarian Society in Brooklyn. The topics are "Luther and the Reformation," "John Calvin and His System," "George Fox and Quakerism," "Wesley and Methodism," "Emanuel Swedenborg," "Murray and Universalism," "Thomas Paine and His Relation to His Own and Later Times in Matters of Religion," "Channing and Unitarianism," and "Theodore Parker." The lecturer began Nov. 5. Mr. Chadwick is one of the rising literary men of the country, and his fresh and vigorous treatment of these subjects will interest a much wider circle than those who habitually listen to him on Sundays.

—In the collection of Bibles in the Centennial Exhibition is a copy of Cromwell's Bible, so called because he published an edition of such size that each soldier could carry it in his knapsack. On the field at Naseby a dead soldier was found with a copy in his knapsack penetrated by a bullet, which reached that verse in Ecclesiastes, "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth." It is five inches long, four and a half wide, and one and three-quarters thick, weighs only eight and a half ounces, and is the property of the American Bible Society. It was printed in 1653 by John Field, printer to Parliament. There are but three other copies, says the Boston Advertiser, in this country, one of which is in the Boston Atheneum, another in the Harvard University library, and a third in the library of the late George Livermore.

—J. B. Lippincott & Co. have nearly ready, Animals Painted by Themselves, translated from the French, containing two hundred illustrations from the vignettes of Grandville, and edited by James Thompson, F. R. G. S. They announce for immediate issue "Gray Beard's" Lay Sermons. They are summaries of the chief doctrines of the Bible, as interpreted and illustrated by the Scriptures themselves; were written by John Franklin Graff, and published originally in the Philadelphia Press, where they attracted much attention. They also announce the following books for young people: The Boys and Girls of the Revolution; a volume of interesting stories of their heroic deeds during the War for Independence, by Charles H. Woodman. Sunshine in Shady Places; a Christmas story, by Edith Milnor, author of Fitful Gleams from Fancy Lands; and The Village School, by the author of Child Nature, and other poems by well-known writers; a book for boys and girls from seven to seventy years of age, with many illustrations.

—The press of D. Appleton & Co. is busy almost beyond precedent with new books and reprints of English and Continental works. They will publish within a fortnight Joan, a new novel by Rhoda Broughton; Rare Good Luck, by R. E. Francilion; a fresh story by the author of "Comin' Thro' the Rye," and a new work by Julia Kavanagh. They have in press a very important work by W. E. H. Lecky on English History During the Georges; Huxley's American Lectures on the Direct Evidence of Evolution, revised and especially prepared by the author, with the illustrations engraved under the direction of Prof. Marsh; a work on Telegraphy by George B. Prescott, of the Western Union, a large book of 800 pages, containing a full account of all instruments in use by operators, with information in regard to every department of the art, and very fully illustrated; a new edition, revised by Prof. Bairn and Dr. Taylor, of Arnott's Elements of Physics; The Psychology of Mind, by Dr. Henry Mandsley; the late William H. Seward's Life and Letters; James E. Freeman's Reminiscences, (now nearly concluded in Appleton's Journal;) the second and concluding volume of Badeau's Military Life of Gen. Grant, (to be ready next March;) and Julian Hawthorne's Sketches of English Life. They will also publish in a few weeks an American edition of German Home Life, concerning which The Academy says: "We have not had so valuable a contribution to our knowledge of Continental manners and customs for many years." They have just brought out The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music, by Prof. Pietro Blaserna, of the Royal University of Rome, the first Italian book in the "International Scientific Series;" A Vocabulary of English Rhymes, by Rev. Samuel A. Barnum, a thick 18mo dictionary of 767 pages, arranged on a new plan and St. George Mivart's Contemporary Evolution, the typography of which is a great improvement on the English edition. Early next year they will publish a complete Index to the sixteen volumes of the American Cyclopedia.

THE CHAMPAGNE COUNTRY.

GATHERING THIS YEAR'S GRAPES.

THE VINEYARDS NEAR REIMS—HOW THE PICKERS WORK—ROTTEN GRAPES REJECTED—IN THE WINE-PRESS—PREPARING CLIQUOT, MUMM, ROEDERER, POMMERY, AND OTHER CELEBRATED BRANDS.

A correspondent of the London Telegraph writes from Reims: "As I told you before, the extra labor for the gathering is chiefly obtained from Alsace, Lorraine, Burgundy, and the Ardennes; and, although the assembly is necessarily rough, it compares most favorably with the ragged hop-pickers of the Kentish fields. I was struck with the cleanliness, decorum, and cheerful character of all employed on the various vineyards I have visited. There was no noise or disturbance anywhere, and wherever I found the laborers, hard at work among the vines, dressing the grapes for the press, or returning from their work, there was the same order, civility, and frequent merriment. The adjacent towns, villages, farms, and barns fairly accommodate this influx of visitors, and, so far as I could see, there were no signs whatever of drunkenness or disorder. The pickers are summoned by beat of drum at daybreak each morning in the market-place of the villages adjacent to the vineyards, and then and there a price is made for the day's labor. This varies according to the work required to be done and the speed with which it is necessary to accomplish it. The bargain struck, away go men, women, and children into the vineyard, each provided with a small basket and a pocket-knife curved like a reaping-hook. They are divided into gangs, each headed by an overseer, and as the small hand-baskets are filled they are carried to the end of the row, where specially-selected hands are employed in what is called dressing the grapes for the press. In what are known as good years this operation is considered useless, and the manufacturer is compelled to purchase the vintage, good and bad together, just as it comes from the field. But any such reckless system is utterly impossible in most of the vineyards this year. At Verzenay, for instance, will be found a considerable quantity of rottenness, much worm-eaten and mildewed fruit, which if pressed in its present condition would assuredly have the effect of tainting the wine. So the system of dressing, happily for the manufacturer, is almost universal. Each bunch, as it is tumbled into the crate at the side of the vineyard, is carefully gone over by female fingers; the bad and cankered part is rejected, diseased stalks are pruned away, and some attempt is made to send the grape to the press in a decent condition. But even this hurried inspection is not all that could be desired, and the sharpest eye is apt to be deceived, particularly in the Verzenay vintage of this year. We frequently discovered in the very heart of what looked a regular and well-grown bunch a grape so absolutely rotten, and capable of infecting its companions when they were heaped together in the press. The dressed fruit, when carefully finished and inspected, is quickly borne away in carts to the nearest press, usually situated in the village, and the refuse remaining represents the loss in quantity to the proprietor. The general color of the grape in the Reims district is black; but there are celebrated vineyards, such as Cramant, which only grow white. It will occur, doubtless, to some one to ask if the laborers are permitted to go upon the old hospitable principle of "eat what you like and pocket none." Nearly every sensible proprietor places no restriction on the obvious temptation of the enjoyment of ripe grapes on a hot day. It is found far the most economical plan in the end, for the first day's debauch ends in such serious inconvenience, and very often loss of wages, that the grapes are left alone from that moment. Women and children are found to be the most skillful pickers, and the men are for the most part employed in carrying the baskets to and fro, emptying the crates, and loading the wagons.

* * * * * * * *

It is time now, however, to follow the grapes to the wine-press, as, piled high in the crates, they are jolted along to the country lanes, preceded by belled horses and imposing teams. The presses are constructed in the barns and outhouses of the various vine-farms, and, recurring much to use an unromantic simile, I am compelled to compare them to the homely mangle of domestic life. It is a rough wooden contrivance, and a huge block of wood is turned by a screw and worked usually by a wheel, up which the men climb, treadmill fashion. The first effect of the wine-mangle is to reduce the heap of purple-bloomed grape to an ugly mash of stalk, pip, and skin, while the juice rushes out delightfully and runs down canals to the vats below. The subsequent pressures of the square cake of residue, which is cut into shape with a spade, and is as hard and crisp as turf, are not so liberal in the production of wine. This operation is a most careful and accurate process, for the grapes when delivered at the press are weighed, and it is known exactly how much liquor can be produced from this given quantity of fruit. Consequently each squeeze of the mangle is accurately taken, and it is known to a hectolitre how much wine is made in each day. And what becomes of that residue of coagulated mash—all pip, and stalk, and stone, and beaten skin—which looks so very nasty, and, as Hamlet would have observed, which "smells so—pah!" To tell the truth, it is carted away to be sold for the manufacture of cheap wines, or to distillers, to be made into inferior brandy. Well might Horace observe, Oh, dura ilia messorum! The stomach aches at the thought of liquor derived from such refuse! The pressed juice is now gently pumped up from the lower vats to larger receptacles, when the earliest process of fermentation takes place. It is then drawn off into barrels, wherein a still more violent and rapid fermentation blows out the barrel bungs with its excitement, and then, after a very short stay in the village, the casks are borne away to Reims to be made into wine. You may guess what energy and industry are bestowed upon the earlier processes of wine-making in the comfortable, prosperous, and well-looking villages placed in the very heart of the vineyards of Champagne, when I tell you that in the pretty little village of Verzenay the material for no less than 2,000,000 bottles of champagne passes through the press.

DECORATIONS FOR SOLDIERS.

A correspondent of the London News writes: Gen. Tchernayeff walked along the rather ricketty line of braves, followed by an orderly bearing the medals, and the General, after pinning the decoration on his breast, embraced and kissed each recipient with great effusion. Of course, there were volleys of cheering from the throngs outside the square, and there was a burst of laughter when a little Montenegrin lad of about thirteen, who had been trying his 'prentice hand at fighting with extreme eagerness during the last few weeks in this quarter, stepped out to the front, and ranging himself in line with the full-grown braves, waited expectant for his decoration also. Tchernayeff as he passed the urchin patted his head, but this is a species of recompense for valor apparently not in high estimation with the Montenegrin youth. The boy looked supremely disappointed, and gazed hungrily at the box of medals which the orderly was carrying. Tchernayeff passed on but Gen. Komaroff, who followed the orderly, would not see the youngster wholly disappointed. He handed him not a medal, indeed, but a ducat, and again was illustrated what has been made apparent in so many cases, from Cassius to Hodgson of the Guides, that the avidus amor habendi and heroism are not incompatible. The Montenegrin boy took the ducat with a joy that could not have been greater had he got the Takova cross, let alone a silver medel. The double ceremony was brought to a close by a march past of the troops which had formed the parade; and of this march past the peculiarity was that the flags of all the battalions were carried past first in a gay clump at the head of the brigade. Conspicuous among these banners was the ghastly drapeau under which march the "Death's Head and Cross-bones" Band, whose motto is "No Quarter," but of whom I have never heard as being in a position to realize their professed principle of irreconcilability.

SIGHT RESTORED.

The Troy Times of Tuesday says: "Michael Whalen, of Granville, Washington County, lost the sight of an eye while blasting fifteen years ago, and has been confined to one-eyed ocular views ever since. Mr. Whalen visited Troy about a month ago to witness the Democratic procession, and during the demonstration was kicked in the face by a horse, and the episode resulted in the destruction of the surviving eye. This left the unfortunate man totally blind. About that time an item appeared in these columns concerning the Charitable Eye and Ear Infirmary in this building. Mrs. Whalen read the same, and urged her husband to have his eyes examined. He accordingly visited the infirmary, and the eye which he lost in blasting was successfully operated upon by the attending physician. The sight of the eye was restored, and the gratitude and delight of Whalen was unbounded. The eye darkened by one of Hewitt's "mules" is incurably blind. If Mr. Whalen, who is a poor man and a Democrat, had considered The Times too expensive a luxury, it is highly probable he would have spent the remainder of his days in total darkness. The Eye and Ear Infirmary is purely a philanthropic institution, and is open from 9 to 11 o'clock A. M. Tuesdays and Fridays, and from 3 to 4 o'clock P. M. Mondays and Fridays. The man who dispenses with a newspaper for economical reasons shows short-sightedness."

FATAL ACCIDENT TO A LADY.

Recently a party of five, consisting of Mrs. Laurie and a niece, belonging to Edinburgh, and three other ladies, who had been residing in the Strathearn Hydropathic Establishment for some time, went in a carriage to visit the Falls of Turret, about three miles north-west of Crieff. At the entrance to the Falls, Mrs. Laurie was left in the carriage while the others went to the Falls, the driver being instructed to drive round by a bridge about half a mile north, where Mrs. Laurie intended to meet the party. She, however, left the carriage, and was soon out of the sight of the driver; and the other ladies making their appearance in the course of fifteen minutes, were surprised not to find her in the carriage. A search was immediately made, and her dead body was discovered in a ravine 30 feet deep. She was about fifty years of age.

LAW REPORTS.

COURT NOTES.

Three boys were committed in the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court yesterday on a charge of stealing barrels and kindling election fires.

On complaint of John Dwyer, of No. 415 West Fifty-sixth street, Justice Wandell sent Minus Dwyer, complainant's brother, to the Island for two months on a charge of threatening to shoot him.

A decision was rendered yesterday by Judge Benedict in the United States Circuit Court, in the of John Vols, the veteran "straw bail" man, convicted of perjury, denying the motion made in arrest of judgment.

Judgment by default was entered in the Clerk's office of the Court of Common Pleas yesterday against the Executors of the late ex-Judge McCunn. The amount of the judgment is $7,360 24, and was obtained by A. T. Stewart & Co. for goods furnished to, and notes given by, McCunn in 1872.

On Sunday last Marie A. Cattle, a French nurse in the employ of Mrs. L. J. Montgomery, of No. 24 West Forty-sixth street, left the latter place taking with her $160 worth of laces and jewelry. Detective McGowan, of the Nineteenth Precinct, arrested her and she was committed in default of bail to answer at the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court yesterday.

Officer Mahony, of the Nineteenth Precinct, dispersed a crowd of roughs that were congregated in East Seventy-fifth street on Tuesday, but they returned and attacked him. One of the number, named Simon Lanigan, struck the officer several powerful blows in the face, and was then taken into custody. Justice Wandell, in the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court, yesterday committed Lanigan for trial in default of $1,000 bail.

The two suits of Marcus Cicero Stanly against Benjamin Wood and others were again brought up in Supreme Court, Chambers, before Judge Lawrence, yesterday. The actions are to recover money alleged to have been misappropriated by the defendants. Argument was had yesterday on two motions, one to frame issues in the suits for trial, and the other for a reference. Judge Lawrence took the papers, reserving his decision.

MR. CALVIN'S FEES REDUCED.

In two suits brought by Francis Morgan and Erastus C. Grant respectively against William M. Tweed, Jr., the Receiver of the Commonwealth Fire Insurance Company, Edwin R. Meade, the Tammany Congressman, was charged with having, while counsel to the plaintiffs, appropriated to his own use money received for them in settlement of the case. An application to punish Meade was referred to Delano C. Calvin to take testimony and report to the court. Calvin delayed the making of a report for so long a time that S. S. Lancaster, the counsel for the plaintiffs, gave Calvin notice that he would proceed as though no reference had been ordered. Calvin, then afraid of losing his fees, obtained a new order of reference, to which was added the condition that the testimony taken on the first reference should be adopted as the testimony of the second reference. Calvin subsequently notified the counsel that his report was ready, and that he would give it up provided he were paid $250 as fees. Mr. Meade showed no inclination to take up the report. Mr. Lancaster also refused to take it up because he did not know in whose favor it was, and also because he thought Calvin was not entitled to the fees. Calvin was directed by Judge Larremore, recently, to show cause why his fees should not be taxed. He put in no appearance, however, and Judge Lawrence yesterday granted an order directing him to give up his report on the payment to him of $10 fees.

THE FLINT DIVORCE CASE.

The old divorce suit of Helen M. Flint against Rufus W. Flint, the "teapot medium," was brought to the attention of Judge Lawrence in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, on a motion to vacate the order of arrest under which the defendant was committed to Ludlow Street Jail. The latter's counsel argued that there had been a want of jurisdiction in the granting of the order of arrest. According to the terms of the commitment, Flint is held for non-payment of alimony and counsel fees. The counsel argued that there was no law authorizing the imprisonment of a man for non-payment of counsel fees. An affidavit, the substance of which has already been given, was read, in which Flint's marriage to the plaintiff is denied. The affidavit is by Flint's first wife. Judge Lawrence took the papers.

AN ATTORNEY IN CONTEMPT.

In the case of Peter Morris and others, against Selah Hiler, in the Court of Common Pleas, the plaintiffs recently made a motion to punish Samuel H. Randall for contempt, on the ground that he, as attorney for one Dusenbury, procured over $7,000 to be paid over to him by the Chamberlain of this City, upon an order obtained by Randall, in disobedience to an injunction, and by fraudulently suppressing facts from the court when he procured the order upon the Chamberlain. Judge Van Brunt, yesterday, adjudged Randall in contempt, and ordered him to be committed to jail, unless he pays back the $7,000. D. M. Porter appeared for the plaintiffs, and S. H. Randall, in person, for himself.

Yesterday morning the single element of uncertainty remaining as to the result of the Presidential contest related to the issue of the election in Florida. There is no longer any doubt that Florida has been carried by the Republicans and the new element of uncertainty introduced by the absence of conclusive returns in regard to South Carolina has been finally removed. The Republicans have carried three Southern States—Louisiana, South Carolina, and Florida—and all the Northern States save four. The result gives the Republican candidates 185 electoral votes, being the exact number necessary to a choice.

To our Democratic contemporaries who claimed yesterday morning that Tilden had secured from twenty to forty electoral votes more than were necessary for his election, this complexion of affairs will be somewhat of a shock. Whatever may be the value of bragging before an election, its efficacy after the event is rather difficult to appreciate. Journals which make it their special boast that they are "newspapers, not organs," ought to be above torturing very plain facts and figures into wildly improbable estimates and thoroughly unsupported claims. There was in addition to the imaginative tables, a good deal of ponderous wisdom and elephantine pleasantry indulged in by some of our neighbors yesterday, which might profitably have been withheld for a more propitious occasion and of which they will probably not care to be frequently reminded.

What may prove to be the beginning of very serious trouble is reported from Louisiana. In the Parish of East Feliciana a large number of voters were not registered, as the Democrats allege, because the Registrar failed to keep his appointments; as the Republicans insist, because that official was menaced and driven away by the Democrats. The voters who contrived to effect registration were, with three exceptions, Democrats, whose votes give Tilden a majority in the parish. Non-registered Democratic voters deposited their ballots separately, the dispatch, which comes from a Democratic source, adding that "the Republicans refrained from voting." Now comes the question, shall the registered votes cast under these circumstances be counted by the Returning Board? Their acceptance is called for by the Democrats and is opposed by the Republicans, the latter urging that the voting in the parish is vitiated by intimidation and fraud. Other parishes are similarly situated, and all of them are parishes on which the Democrats rely for the majority they still claim. Here, then, are the elements of a controversy on which may turn the issue of the Presidential election. It is a controversy which should have been provided against. The condition of Louisiana was notorious. The Democrats proclaimed their determination to carry the State at all hazards, and the Republicans were handicapped in many districts with local managers who cared more for the attainment of their own corrupt and ambitious ends than for the result of the national contest. It was a case in which Federal authority should have interposed to the fullest possible extent. To the fact that it left the State to take care of itself—or, rather, left the honest voters at the mercy of unscrupulous partisans—must be ascribed the ominous incidents now reported.

It is distressing to find amid the general joy and felicitation among Democrats over yesterday's suppositious victory, the signs of a rapidly maturing personal difficulty between the editors of the Sun and World. The quarrel has been brewing for some little time, and, like Touchstone's, appears to have been on the seventh cause. Impartial spectators imagined that it would stop short at the "retort courteous," but the World clearly invited its continuance when it came out with the "quip modest," elsewhere quoted. By all the degrees of "honor and honorable quarrels," otherwise known as quarreling in print or by the book, the Sun ought to have stopped short at the "reply churlish," or at most contented itself with the "reproof valiant." But it showed a disposition to push matters by giving the "counter-check quarrelsome," and so the rival organs of Tilden are at any moment in danger of resorting to the "lie circumstantial," and the "lie direct." Let us hope they may stop short of this last indignity, and content themselves by measuring swords and parting. Otherwise, it may be awkward for "the man of two hemispheres."

Our special dispatch from Hartford explains what must have puzzled many—the fact, namely, that while able to wrest the Legislature from the Democrats, the Republicans were defeated in the popular vote of the State. Recent Senatorial contests have familiarized us with the methods employed by moneyed men among the Connecticut Democracy to acquire public honors. Money has supplied the leverage. So it seems to have been on Tuesday. In the cities, money was freely used, and there were frauds on a scale that would scandalize communities less strict in their professed morality than those of Connecticut. Some of these frauds have been facilitated by measures enacted by the Democratic Legislature, which seems to have exercised its ingenuity in breaking down the safeguards of law, and in rendering attacks upon the ballot-box easy and safe. The correction of these abuses of power will be, as our correspondent points out, one of the tasks to which the Republican majority in the new Legislature will address itself.

In the Eleventh Congressional district, Mr. Levi P. Morton ran 342 votes ahead of the national ticket, and polled 4,100 votes more than were cast for Mr. Bailey in 1872. Nevertheless, thanks to the ingenuity of the methods of Yorkville canvassers, Mr. Morton has been beaten by some 527 votes. As Mr. Morton had a majority of 1,311 outside of Yorkville, it would appear that this fragrant section of the Eleventh District gave a majority of 1,838 in favor of its more congenial candidate, Mr. Willis. As Mr. Willis ran behind the Democratic Presidential ticket 1,964 votes, the performance is, to say the least, a surprising one.

The Presidential election in Mexico has fortunately resulted in the choice of Lerdo de Tejada. The President and Vice President are chosen by the Congress, which, in this instance, resolved itself into an electoral college last month and voted for Lerdo de Tejado by 131 to 45. An appeal from this decision lies to the Supreme Court, and Señor Iglesias, President of that court, and virtually Vice President, has made such an appeal, probably on the ground of the ineligibility of some of the members of the Congress. The action of the Congress, however, has been sustained, and there is not likely to be any interruption in the present peaceful administration. The successful candidate was first chosen President in 1872. During his term of office he has exhibited great firmness of character and some administrative ability. Formerly, Mexicans were generally of the opinion that a condition of revolution was good for the country, as it gave employment to people, who had better wages in the Army than they could earn in peaceable pursuits. This delusion has been partially dispelled by President Lerdo, whose policy has been designed to encourage a revival of every form of industry.

THE TRUST RENEWED.

The sober sense of the people has triumphed after all. Twenty-one States have been carried by the Republicans, and their 185 electoral votes will make Rutherford B. Hayes the next President of the United States. The victory is one of the greatest moment to the country, and will be the occasion of very sincere thankfulness among the majority of the intelligent and law-abiding portion of the American people. But the successful result of Tuesday's struggle should not blind us to the perilous nearness with which the Republican Party has approached defeat. The contest comes so close to a drawn battle as to leave but little room for jubilation. The country has neither accepted the Republican candidates with pronounced enthusiasm nor rejected the Democrats with decision. After making all deductions on the score of intimidation and sectional feeling, after eliminating, in fact, the action of the South from the moral aspect of the contest altogether, we have still to face the fact of a very decided change of sentiment among Northern voters in regard to the degree of trust to be accorded to the promises of the Republican Party. The election of Tuesday did not mark the close of the Republican Party's long epoch of power. But it did place the conditions of that power on a new basis, and it did accompany the renewed trust with an emphatic intimation that it must be more faithfully discharged in the future than it has been in the near past.

Had the power heretofore intrusted to the party been wisely used, had its exercise been uniformly delegated to honest and able men, neither the shot-gun policy nor the corruption of the franchise could have reduced the party to the narrow victory of Tuesday. The lesson of the election will be thrown away if it be not accepted, in part at least, as a rebuke to the selfishness and the greed which have been allowed to disgrace the Republican name; and if it be not used as a means of purifying the party from influences which have tarnished its record, and blurred in public memory the impression of its great services and noble aspirations. The party has a career before it greater than even the one which lies behind it. But the camp-followers who have stuck to the Republican Party for the sake of the spoils they could secure must be got rid of. The leaders who have abused the confidence of the party, by substituting the pursuit of a selfish ambition for devotion to its principles must be deposed. Purified and strengthened, the party will be prepared to discharge the great and responsible duties which the people have again intrusted to it, with a singleness and integrity of purpose which will prove that it has not fallen away from the ideal of its founders.

A REPUBLICAN CONGRESS.

Important changes were made in the constitution of the next Congress by the elections of Tuesday, following those of October last. The present House of Representatives has a Democratic majority of 73. This has been wiped out in the next House, and the majority already reversed will be made more strongly Republican after the New-Hampshire election. The gains by which this change has been effected are as follows: Arkansas, 1; California, 2; Florida, 1; Illinois, 6; Indiana, 4; Iowa, 1; Kansas, 1; Massachusetts, 3; Michigan, 2; Missouri, 4; New-Jersey, 1; New-York, 1; Ohio, 5; Oregon, 1; Pennsylvania, 11; Tennessee, 1; these are offset by the following losses: Alabama, 1; Kentucky, 1; Mississippi, 2; South Carolina, 2—leaving a clear Republican majority of 2. It will be seen that the changes above noted are pretty well scattered throughout the country. We have gained 1 in Arkansas, which is balanced by the loss of 1 in Kentucky; we have gained 4 in Missouri, offset by a loss 2 in South Carolina; the gain of 1 in Florida and 1 in Tennesee must be surrendered to the loss of 2 in Mississippi. Our gains and losses are nearly equal in the South. But while the losses in South Carolina and Mississippi may be charged in part to intimidation, the gains in Missouri, Tennessee, and Florida are wrested from naturally hostile constituencies with no special advantages. In the North all the changes have been favorable to the Republicans. Massachusetts, Ohio, which is a sort of new Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Indiana furnish the chief gains, while the Pacific coast contributes three.

In this connection it is interesting to note the changes which will take place in the Senate. That body now contains 40 Republicans, 29 Democrats, and 4 Senators who were elected as Independents. Of these, Mr. Hamilton, of Texas, usually acts with the Democrats, while Mr. Booth, of California,—who declared openly for the Republican ticket in his own State during the late canvass—Mr. Christiancy, of Michigan, and Mr. Cameron, of Wisconsin, have, for the most part, acted with the Republicans. It is substantially accurate to say, therefore, that the Senate stands 30 Democrats to 43 Republicans, with one vacancy, in Louisiana. The elections of the current year have given the Democrats the power to elect a successor to Mr. Clayton, from Arkansas, one to Mr. Alcorn, from Mississippi, (Mr. Lamar has been chosen,) and one to Mr. Frelinghuysen from New-Jersey. On the other hand, the Senators from the new State of Colorado will be Republican, and on the 4th of March next the Senate may be classified as 33 Democrats to 42 Republicans; if the vacancy in Louisiana is filled by a Republican, the majority will be 9; if by a Democrat, only 7.

It is plain that Congress, so nearly balanced as these figures indicate, will be powerless for any partisan legislation, and this would probably be the case even if the majority in the Senate were not opposed to the majority in the House. It would be idle to try at this early date to forecaste, beyond this simple statement, the probable course of Congressional action. Very much will depend on the occupant of the Presidential chair. Should the Executive adopt a wise policy in regard to any of the great questions of the hour—the currency, the revenue, the reform of the civil service, the South, and should he push such a policy with any degree of force and discretion, it is clear that he might make considerable progress in the interval that he would occupy his office.

The next Congress will be obliged to deal with the pledge of resumption according to the act of 1875. It is not possible that either party can do so without aid from the other. The inflationists are not only strong enough to paralyze any slight Republican majority which may exist in the House, but they actually constitute the majority of the Democratic Representatives in the present, and, probably, in the next House. In the same way, there is only too much reason to fear that the Republican inflationists in the Senate are more than equal to the Republican majority in that body. The question, therefore, must be treated without regard to party lines. There is, as we believe, no doubt that the hard-money men will have a decided majority in the Senate, and they are likely to have a majority in the House as well. With the guidance and impulse which they will receive from President Hayes and the Cabinet he is likely to call around him, and with the great responsibility imposed on them by the existing situation, we shall hope that they will do their whole duty by the country.

MR. ADAMS LEFT BEHIND.

It is impossible for the unregenerate and ordinary man not to feel a thrill of wicked satisfaction at the fate which has overtaken Mr. Charles Francis Adams. Time out of mind he has been held up as the political paragon for whom the world was waiting and pining. His friends have represented that he was the only man in the Republic who could fill any place for which commanding talents were required. Was there a call for an orator who should describe the glories of the American people, and sketch its progress through a century? Instantly, a sharp, high voice, keyed in the true Massachusetts twang, shouted, "Charles Francis Adams." Or, if there was trouble with an American representative abroad, the original Adams man clasped his hands over his stomach, and, as he doubled himself up, exclaimed, "Oh, why was not Charles Francis Adams there?" Whether the Democrats were deliberating in convention at St. Louis or the Republicans at Cincinnati, the cry was still the same: "Nominate Charles Francis Adams, and be saved!" And when the Liberal Revenue Reformers met at Cincinnati, in 1872, and nominated Greeley, the same Pharisees cried out that Adams, only Adams, could lead the cohorts of Reform to victory. In their opinion, the great error of the Democrats, in 1876, in not choosing him for their leader, was only equaled by the still more fatal blunder of the Republicans, who failed to do the same thing. He has been the universal candidate, in season and out of season.

If there is one characteristic more than another which challenges public attention to the Adams family it is the "bumptiousness" of its members. Their talents are something extraordinary. They have divided the universe among themselves, and each in his allotted sphere gives laws and enlightenment to mankind. Each one is an "eminent authority" upon something or another. One regulates the precession of the equinoxes, another the political economy of the Republic, a third exercises a paternal care over the railways of the world, while a fourth is a sort of political providence, without whose notice not a voter is allowed to fall to the ground. It is a singular illustration of the waywardness of human nature that, while each illustrious member of this illustrious family daily returns thanks that his name is Adams, most people are bored with the Adamses. Such is the perversity of man. So, now that the head of the family, descending from the icy heights where he has wrapped himself in the impenetrable fogs of his own greatness, has consented to become a candidate for Governor, and has been beaten "clean out of sight," it is only natural that here and there a profane person should say, "I'm glad of it." The old-fashioned Massachusetts Democrats who were enraged that a negative man should have been forced on them, are glad of it. The Republicans, who have had Adams thrown at their heads these twenty years, are glad of it. John Kelly, who gave him a certificate of character under protest, is very glad of it. Tilden, who beat Adams two or three thousand votes in his own State, is glad of it. And Dorsheimer, who has not yet got rid of the cold which he caught by corresponding with this iciest of the Adams family, is revenged at last. Only Mr. Samuel Bowles, who has a patent right as an Adams nominator, sits down, like Bildad the Shuhite, and, sprinkling dust on his head toward heaven, cries, "Alas for Adams!"

Whatever the Democracy may be, or may have done, outside of Massachusetts, in that State, at least, they had a chance to show just what they thought of Adams. And they have embraced the opportunity. Baker, the Prohibition candidate for Governor, drew away part of the strength of Rice, the Republican nominee. The united vote of these two candidates about equals that of Hayes. But Adams is two or three thousand behind the regular Democratic vote. We said, long ago, that he was merely a figure-head, a name. Even the suit of blue-jeans which was put into the Indiana canvass was a more material object. Therefore it ran better. Yet Mr. Adams was forced upon the party in order that Tilden might show to all the world how deadly in earnest he was about this matter of reform. Adams was the pink—the double-distilled extract and quintessence of reform. There was no statesman so broad, though he had managed to get in a back-handed blow at Lincoln when he delivered his Seward oration, on account of old scores; and no such unselfish patriot, though he had been posed in the attitude of an expectant candidate since the time when the memory of this generation runneth not to the contrary.

When Mr. Adams accepted the nomination of the Massachusetts Democrats, he held his nose, as it were, and said, "You have called me in very late, but I can save this sick man," or words to that effect. He told the Democrats, (though he took good care not to say "Democrat" once,) that they should have come to him earlier if they wanted the ægis of our liberties set up on its legs again, and the palladium restored, and things generally put to rights. But as this was a desperate case, he would overlook past neglect, and reorganize the world on a paying basis. The Massachusetts Democrats, being men, are only human. They confessed that they thought Mr. Adams tiresome; and with a wisdom which savors of the children of this world, they traded him off for members of the Legislature, county officers, and Selectmen. In the calm seclusion of his comfortable cell at Quincy, this sage has looked out and serenely observed that politics were all wrong. He would go out and set them right. A good old lady traveling with her aged and rustic spouse, as the train moved out from a way station, sank back with a sigh of relief, and said: "I'm glad on't! I'm glad on't! My old man was all the time telling me that I'd git left. And now he's been and got left. I'm glad on't!" Mr. Adams is a wise man; but he has "gone and got left."

THE TRIBUNE IN A FIX.

We are rather sorry for the Tribune. It is in a quandary, in some respects more embarrassing than that which it encountered at the beginning of the campaign. Then it was painfully undecided. It had acted so persistently against the Republicans that the Democrats regarded it reasonably enough, as a sure ally. They had been objects of its affectionate entreaties in 1872, and they were justified in assuming that they would have the little help it could render in 1876. One condition they overlooked. The Tribune was on the fence; they imagined that it was posing in an independent attitude, when, in truth, it was waiting to estimate the chances. Fortune seemed to favor the Republicans, and the Tribune, with many pious protestations, left the Democracy to their devices and proceeded to patronize Hayes and Wheeler. That was its position during three short months, and until yesterday morning. Just then the outlook was squally. Hopes and doubts were mingled in about equal proportions. The Tribune became alarmed. It had deserted the Democratic Party for no other reason than that, at the moment, it seemed to be the losing cause, but now there was a chance of victory perching upon its banners. What should the Tribune do? What could it do to recover lost ground and reinstate itself in the good graces of Tilden and the triumphant Democracy? The question was urgent. Delay was dangerous. The Tribune imagined it saw Tilden slightly ahead. With the alacrity of a lackey in disgrace, the Tribune adapted itself to the possibilities of the occasion. To change the metaphor, its sails, which but the other week flapped over to the Republican side, flapped back again, and the pilot forthwith steered the hapless Tribune straight toward the Democratic haven. Up went the Tilden colors. "Hurrah," shouted the Tribune crew; "Tilden elected!" The wise commander, with the versatility of genius, took up his pen, and under the heading, "Mr. Tilden the President," indited a profound essay, the burden of it being that Mr. Tilden is just the man for the situation, "and will receive the hearty sympathy and support of thousands" who wait but for the Tribune's approving nod. A week ago, and the Tribune saw naught but ruin in the pathway of the nation if Tilden were elected. Yesterday, in the ardor of its devotion to what it supposed to be the rising sun, it spoke of "the hopeful aspect of Mr. Tilden's election," and rejoiced "in the possibility that all our fears were groundless, our suspicions and our doubts, to say the least, unjust." To any Democrat, with the faintest touch of an angel in his composition, the overture must have been irresistible. Had Mr. Tilden really been elected, he would doubtless have displayed his magnanimity by welcoming the sorrowing and repentant Tribune to his patriotic bosom. And the Democratic Party? And John Kelly and Tammany? The Tribune, in its ground and lofty tumbling of yesterday, did not forget either. It complimented the Democratic management of the campaign, and spat upon the Republican management. The Democrats, it said, "used the best intellects in their party to address their best arguments to the intelligence of voters," while the Republican canvass "ran more in party grooves and depended less on argument than on prejudice." From which should be inferred, that "the best intellects" of the Democratic party captured the "intelligence" of the Tribune and brought it back bodily to the forgiving party which it basely deserted three months ago. As for Tammany, it ought to be satisfied. For did not the Tribune swallow the Tammany ticket without hesitation, and did it not yesterday declare the election of Mayor Ely and Surrogate Calvin "especially a matter for gratification." Why the electon of that "noblest work of the Creator," Richard Croker, did not form the subject of special felicitation it would be difficult to say. The Tribune will, doubtless, find time enough to repair the omission. The question is, will the Tribune flop over once more this morning, and reproduce for the glory of the new Republican President, the complimentary phrases which, but yesterday, it coined to win the smiles of Mr. Tilden and his supporters? And if it does, what will they be worth?

PISTOLS AND PELAGIANISM.

Mrs. Irene House, being filled with gratitude for her acquittal and overflowing with love for her fellow-beings—with, of course, the exception of that unfortunate class, her husbands—announces that she intends to devote the rest of her life to the philanthropic work of lecturing upon the evils of divorce and the merits of Christianity. She is determined never to rest until she succeeds in having "divorces abolished for every cause all over the United States," and in procuring such a change of the school laws as will insure the religious instruction of the pupils, "so that sin cannot get hold on their minds or lives." These noble purposes speak volumes in praise of murder as an improving moral influence. Prior to the shooting of the late Mr. House, Mrs. House was commonly looked upon as a gay, worldly woman, without any definite aim in life. Now we find that a single murder has changed the whole current of her life, and made her capable of becoming a professional philanthropist and an ardent advocate of her special variety of Christianity.

It will be generally conceded that Mrs. House is an expert in divorce. She has been divorced herself, and she has lived for years as the wife and intimate friend of a busy manufacturer of divorces. If there is any woman living who is in a position to estimate the true value of divorce, that woman is Mrs. House, and if she condemns divorce as a clumsy and antiquated remedy, wholly inconsistent with the spirit of the age, we may be sure that she has good reasons for so doing.

It will not be difficult to imagine the arguments with which Mrs. House will advocate the abolition of divorce laws. Though the late Mr. House advertised that the divorces furnished by him were not to be paid for until they were delivered to the purchaser, they nevertheless cost a good deal of money. If we estimate that in an ordinary divorce suit of the House pattern, one lawyer at $50 and two witnesses at $25 each are required, the additional incidental expenses would bring the total cost up to $100; and at seasons when the market value of perjury is high, the cost would be still greater. Now, Mrs. House's method of breaking the matrimonial yoke is ridiculously cheap in comparison with the old-fashioned plan. A passably good revolver can be bought for $7 50, and a single-barrelled pistol, which, except in difficult cases, would ordinarily be quite sufficient to kill the largest husband, can be had for a dollar. As to incidental expenses, Mrs. House's own experience has shown that they are absolutely nothing, unless the husband is carelessly shot on a valuable carpet. Doubtless the fair lecturer will not fail to impress upon her hearers that when a husband is to be slain, he should be lured into the back-yard, where he can die without doing any injury to the furniture. The funeral expenses, are, of course, paid by the friends of the deceased, and the happy widow has no concern with the Coroner's fee. The vast superiority, in point of cheapness, of the pistol over the cumbersome legal processes in which Mr. House dealt, is thus plainly evident, and when Mrs. House demonstrates this fact to her audiences, they cannot but admit the justice of her objection to divorce.

Moreover, the pistol is infinitely more certain than a decree of the best court in all Indiana. The difficulty with the old-fashioned patent decree was that impertinent courts outside of Indiana would sometimes set it aside on the frivolous plea of perjury, and thus seriously injure the plaintiff. There is, however, no setting aside of the decree of the pistol bullet. Even if the New-Jersey court which lately tried Mrs. House had found that she had taken an unwarrantable liberty in shooting her husband, the latter would not have been reinstated in his marital rights. A dead husband can never be revived by any possible judicial decision, and hence the woman who shoots her husband obtains a degree of confidence and peace of mind which no decree of divorce could ever give her.

While Mrs. House's opposition to divorce laws, and her advocacy of the cheap and simple pistol as their substitute, commends itself to every unprejudiced mind, her scheme for the improvement of the public schools is not altogether satisfactory. She asserts that Christianity should be instilled into the pupils "as thoroughly as the alphabet;" but she says not a word about pistol practice. It might be imagined that in writing "Christianity" instead of "pistol practice," she had made a slip of the pen; but she has elsewhere shown that she really meant to advocate the teaching of Christianity. Now, a little reflection must convince her that in order to prepare a girl to murder her future husband she should be taught the use of the pistol. She might also be taught Christianity as an elegant accomplishment, but it would be of comparatively little use to her. Mrs. House must modify her scheme of instruction so as to give the pistol due prominence, or else the practice of husband shooting will be carried on in so clumsy and unworkmanlike manner as to bring it into disrepute.

When so admirable a woman as Mrs. House proposes to become a public teacher, no orthodox person can perceive without regret that her theology is defective. She expressly says that "all the faults and sins and evils of life can be entirely overcome" by education. This is precisely the sad and erroneous way in which "the Pelagians do vainly talk;" and if Mrs. House teaches this doctrine, she will teach what the Church of England and all Calvinistic bodies regard as a dangerous heresy. If she were merely an ordinary woman—a quiet, respectable, pious matron—her Pelagianism might be comparatively harmless, but in a woman so good and great as she unquestionably is, the slightest departure from orthodoxy is to be regretted. Mrs. House is the most eminent murderess of the present day, and her fame in that respect imposes upon her the obligation to be in all respects worthy of it. We may feel gratified to her for pointing out to us a more excellent way than the divorce suit, and there is not a coroner or an undertaker in the land who will not feel under personal obligations to a lecturer whose arguments so directly tend to increase the number of inquests and to give new life to the coffin business; but when we reflect that instead of urging that school-girls should be taught to use the pistol, and should learn what are the most vulnerable spots in which to hit a husband, she proposes that they should be taught the Pelagian heresy, we cannot give to her lecture enterprise that warm support which would otherwise be its due.

THE CLOSING EXHIBITION.

THE PREPARATION FOR THE CEREMONIES—THE FIREWORKS—THE SCHEME FOR A PERMANENT EXHIBITION IN THE MAIN BUILDING.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—The erection of the immense platform for the accommodation of the invited guests on closing day was begun to-day in front of the western entrance of the Main Building. It is constructed so as to insure accommodations for 1,500 persons. An elevated space in the centre, which will accommodate 300 seats, will be occupied by the President of the United States and his Cabinet, the members of the United States Centennial Commission and Board of Finance, the Diplomatic Corps and members of the foreign Commissioners to the Centennial. The portion to the north will be reserved mainly for the orchestra and the chorus, and that on the opposite side for the Women's Centennial Commission and the ladies accompanying invited guests. Special accommodations for the press have been selected immediately in the front of the central space, and the reserved area on either side to the right and left will be furnished with settees for the use of the invited guests of the Centennial authorities. The ceremonies will brief, and of a modest but impressive character. The programme will be inaugurated at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and will occupy about an hour.

The formal entertainment of the foreign Commissioners by the Centennial management will take place to-morrow evening at St. George's Hall, Thirteenth and Arch streets, when all of the nations participating in the great Exhibition will be represented, and probably heard from through appointed spokesmen. The President of the United States will be present.

The great pyrotechnic display, which will take place to-morrow on George's Hill, is expected to surpass, in grandeur and beauty, anything of the kind ever before attempted in this country. At 6:30 o'clock the London pyrotechnists will commence with eighteen pieces, and be followed by the display of the Philadelphian, consisting of fourteen pieces, the fog-horn signal indicating the close of the first and beginning of the second exhibition. These will be supplemented by a brilliant illumination of the grounds with large lights stationed at various points.

At an informal meeting of the committee acting for the projectors of the permanent exhibition movement, held here to-day, it was agreed to request Councils to extend the use of the Common Council Chamber for a public meeting on Saturday, to consider the subject. The Japanese and Netherlands Commissioners, having made application for the purpose, have been privileged to inclose their displays in the Main Building with fencing on the 10th inst. A large portion of the Netherlands exhibit will be carefully packed up within the next two weeks, preparatory to being exported and subsequently rearranged for the Paris Exhibition of 1878.

THE BEHRING SEA WHALERS.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—The Times gives prominence in its columns to-day to a letter signed "Arctic," and dated Portsmouth, which is presumed to be written by a member of Capt Nares' Polar Expedition. The writer reviews the reports of the recent disaster to the American whaling-fleet in Behring's Sea, and combats the theory that the seamen who remained on the vessels in the ice must necessarily perish during the Winter.

A NEW DOMINION LOAN.

TORONTO, Nov. 8.—The Evening Telegram has the following special from London, England, dated to-day: "The New Dominion loan of £2,500,000, put upon this market by the Canadian Finance Minister has been rapidly taken up. The subscriptions to the loan came in so rapidly that the list was closed yesterday afternoon, after having been open for a few hours only."

SAVANNAH, Nov. 8.—Dr. Juriah Harriss, a prominent physician, and John H. Gardner, formerly of the firm of John H. Gardner & Co., shipbrokers, died yesterday of yellow fever.

The total number of interments to-day was ten, of which six were the bodies of persons who died from yellow fever.

A SHERIFF KILLED AT THE POLLS.

RUSSIAN VIEWS AS SET FORTH IN THE IMPERIAL ORGAN IN BRUSSELS—THE OTHER POWERS.

BRUSSELS, Nov. 8.—Le Nord, to-day, says: "Russia insists on an early conference of the Powers on the basis of the English proposals. General Ignatief, the Russian Ambassador at Constantinople, has been instructed to support energetically a large measure of administrative autonomy for Bosnia, Herzegovinia, and Bulgaria, with efficacious guarantees under the control of the powers."

LONDON, Nov. 9.—Reuter's Paris dispatch says: "Intelligence received here states that Mr. Elliot, the British Ambassador at Constantinople, will communicate to the Porte the English proposals relative to the conference. The proposals in question, (which were sent in these dispatches yesterday,) are worded so as to enable either Russia or Turkey to make counter proposals.

The Porte will not reply until it knows the tenor of the answer of the Great Powers. It is believed that France and Italy will maintain reserve until aware of Russia's views. Austria has semi-officially announced her intention to await the answer of the other powers. The Russian answer will probably not be known until the Czar arrives at St. Petersburg."

La France says it is stated that Prince Bismarck has declared that he cannot see the utility of Germany's participating in the conference.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times telegraphs that Russia and France have accepted the English proposal for a conference.

The Vienna correspondent of the Daily Telegraph reports that Russia has yielded consent to the English proposal that all future action decided by the Conference should respect the territorial integrity of Turkey. This assent was obtained by the friendly but firm attitude of England. Russia at first objected because she thought occupation might possibly be necessary.

LONDON, Nov. 9—The Times' dispatch from Berlin says a preliminary conference will meet at Constantinople shortly to arrange a peace programme which is to be discussed and settled by a second and more formal conference. The negotiations are proceeding favorably. The Russian Minister of Finance has drawn up a report on the finances of the Empire, in which he strongly deprecates war.

THE ELECTION NEWS IN EUROPE.

THE LONDON PRESS DISCUSSING THE MATTER UNDER THE IMPRESSION THAT TILDEN HAD A MAJORITY.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—The Daily News this morning, discussing the Presidential election in the United States, says the result cannot surprise any attentive observer of American politics. It cannot cause the reversal of the legislation of the years immediately succeeding the war. It is a change rather of men than of measures. The News fears no injury to the American credit, and regards the payment of the national debt in specie as safe whichever party may be in power. It bases its generally favorable anticipations in a great measure on the personal antecedents and moderation of Mr. Tilden, who is likely to exercise a restraining influence upon the extreme section of the party. It does not, as yet, see any indication that the election affects the question of protective legislation. Questions relative to the South have been the deciding forces, the News thinks, rather than the currency or free-trade problems.

The Standard also regards Mr. Tilden's antecedents as furnishing a good guarantee of the honesty and moderation of his administration, and a security against inflation. The Standard congratulates the Americans on the law-abiding spirit displayed throughout the country, and says the result of the election is scarcely a greater cause of congratulation than the fact that so close a contest for such a great stake should have passed without violence and bloodshed, when riots in a few places might have turned the scale by intimidating voters.

The Times elaborately reviews the difficulties which Mr. Tilden will have to encounter in consequence of the conflicting majorities in the Senate and House of Representatives, and also because of the claims of the various sections of the Democrats for office patronage. The Times considers Gov. Tilden's antecedents a guarantee against his yielding to the pressure of the Southern Democrats in favor of reactionary measures; and in any event, it is more obvious that there is no danger of his assenting to measures of inflation or repudiation. He, moreover, is too sagacious to modify his foreign policy for the contentment of Irish Democrats. There is no ground, whether from a financial or political point of view, for denying him the confidence of Englishmen. We are bound to respect the clearly pronounced will of the American people, and we cannot consider it an unmixed misfortune for the Republicans that they are temporarily compelled to breathe the bracing air of opposition.

A DECREE IN CUBA RELATING TO FOREIGN MONEY — IRON RAILS MADE MORE DURABLE THAN STEEL—THE PRICE OF SILVER.

HAVANA, Nov. 8, 1876.

A decree has been issued abolishing immediately the higher rate at which foreign gold and silver money was received here by the Government according to the decree of September 27, 1875. Henceforth foreign money will be received only at the value of the coin marked on the same.

LEEDS, Nov. 8.—The Mercury says experiments are being made with a process for increasing the durability of iron rails, which promise the greatest success. An eminent railway official has asserted confidently that by this process iron rails can be produced, more durable than steel, at an increase in cost of only $5 per ton over ordinary iron rails.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—Silver is quoted to-day at 53¾d. per ounce.

Vernon County is reported Democratic by a majority of 1,200, and Livingston Democratic by a majority of 400.

One hundred and forty-two towns, wards, and precincts outside of St. Louis give Tilden 20,829, Hayes 12,702. One hundred and twenty-two towns, wards, and precincts gave Phelps 14,569, Finkelnberg 10,305. These returns come from all parts of the State, and do not show the result in a single county. No estimate has yet been made of Congressional districts, not enough returns having been received from any one of them outside of this city to give the results, although it can perhaps be safely stated that the Democrats will carry all but one or possibly two of them outside of this city.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

Midnight.—Unofficial returns give Anthony Itter, Rep., in the First Congressional District in this city, about 200 majority, and Nathan Cole, Rep., in the Second District, from 300 to 400 majority. These are Republican gains, the first being over E. C. Kehr, and the latter over Erastus Wells, both prominent members. In the Third R. G. Frost, Democrat, is elected over L. S. Metcalf, Republican, by a small majority. Of the districts outside the city, the Sixth is reported carried by Haven, Rep., by 300 majority, and the Tenth by Pollard, Rep., by 1,200 majority, beating De Bolt, the present member.

THE STATE GOOD FOR 8,000 MAJORITY FOR HAYES AND WHEELER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

OMAHA, Nov. 8.—It will be several days before a complete count of the vote will be made, but you may depend upon Nebraska for from 8,000 to 12,000 majority for Hayes and Wheeler. The election passed off quietly.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

OMAHA, Nov. 8.—Douglas County is conceded to the Democrats, and claimed by them by from 500 to 800 majority. Their entire county ticket is elected. Cass County elects the entire Republican ticket. Otoe County goes Democratic by 150 majority. Nine additional precincts give Hayes 407 majority. The whole Greenback ticket is elected in Richardson County by majorities ranging from 90 to 100.

KANSAS.

A MAJORITY OF 30,000—A REPUBLICAN GAIN OF ONE CONGRESSMAN.

TOPEKA, Nov. 8.—The Chairman of the State Central Committee has returns sufficient to show that the State will give Hayes 30,000 majority, and Anthony, Rep., for Governor, from fifteen thousand to twenty thousand majority. For Congress, Haskell, Rep., in the Second District, is elected by about one thousand majority, a Republican gain. In Shawnee County the whole Republican ticket is elected, with possibly the exception of one Representative in the Legislature.

Three Republican members of Congress are elected, which is a gain of one, (Haskell in the Second District.) The Legislature stands Republican by three to one. More Republicans have been elected on the straight ticket this year than for a number of years.

CALIFORNIA'S LOYALTY.

THE STATE REPUBLICAN BEYOND DOUBT—A GAIN OF CONGRESSMEN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 8.—The State is Republican without doubt. We have a gain of two Congressmen. ABERLY ABELL, Chairman.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 8.—Twelve out of forty-nine precincts in this city give Hayes 2,836, and Tilden, 2,834. For Congress, Davis (Rep.) has 2,921, and Piper (Dem.) 2,597. It seems likely the Republicans may elect all four Congressman; Davis in the First and Page in the Second are conceded. McKenna, thus far, is 2,000 ahead in the Third District. Pacheco's chances are good in the Fourth. The Democrats are jubilant over the returns from the East. Tilden telegraphs Mayor Bryant that he is elected.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 8.—The returns from the city are nearly completed. Hayes will have a small majority. For Congress, Davis, Rep., is elected by 2,500. There are few additional returns from the interior, and none to effect the general result.

Ten P. M.—The majority in California from partially official returns is estimated at 5,000 for Hayes.

THE TERRITORIES.

REPUBLICAN DELEGATE ELECTED IN WYOMING AND A DEMOCRAT IN MONTANA.

CHEYENNE, Nov. 8.—Latest returns give Corbet, Rep., for Delegate to Congress, 1,000 majority.

SALT LAKE, Nov. 8.—Maginnis, Dem., is elected Delegate for Montana.

Cannon, Mormon, is elected Delegate for Utah over Baskin, Liberal, by a probable majority of 20,000.

NORTH CAROLINA.

REPORTS OF A SMALL DEMOCRATIC MAJORITY.

From a Democratic Source.

RALEIGH, Nov. 8.—The returns continue to report heavy Democratic gains from all quarters. The Democratic majority in the State will hardly fall below 15,000. The Democrats have elected all of their Congressmen except in the Second District, which is carried by Gov. Brogden, the Republican candidate. The Legislature, which elects a United States Senator, is more than two-thirds Democratic.

WEST VIRGINIA.

TILDEN'S MAJORITY ABOUT 17,000.

WHEELING, Nov. 8.—The State will give about 17,000 majority for Tilden. All three Democratic candidates for Congress are elected.

GEORGIA.

A LARGE MAJORITY FOR TILDEN.

AUGUSTA, Nov. 7.—Georgia sends an unbroken Democratic delegation to Congress. The majority for Tilden is about seventy-five thousand.

ALABAMA.

THE CONGRESSIONAL CONTESTS—TILDEN'S MAJORITY IN THE STATE PROBABLY 25,000.

MONTGOMERY, Nov. 8.—The returns continue to indicate at least 25,000 majority for Tilden. For Congress, Herbert in the Second, Williams in the Third, Ligon in the Fifth, Hewitt in the Sixth, Forney in the Seventh, and Garth in the Eighth District, all Democrats, are elected. The returns are favorable to Jones, Dem., over Bromberg. Shelly, Dem., makes immense gains in the Fourth District and is very hopeful of election over Haraldson and Rapier, the rival colored candidates. As far as heard from there was not a disturbance in the State.

ARKANSAS.

A SMALLER VOTE THAN IN OCTOBER—THE RESULT IN THE CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS.

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 8.—Returns from all parts of the State show that the vote was smaller than at the State election in October. For Congress Ganse, Dem., in the First District, is elected without opposition. In the Second District the election of Slemmons, Dem., over Snyder, Rep., is conceded by the Republicans. The Third District, in which Little Rock is situated, is close between McClure, Rep., Stuart, Dem., and Cravens, Dem. It is claimed by the Republicans. It will require an official count. In the Fourth District Gunter is elected without opposition. The State gives a large majority for Tilden and Hendricks.

TENNESSEE.

THE DEMOCRATS GENERALLY SUCCESSFUL.

MEMPHIS, Nov. 8.—The election excitement has not abated, and the bulletin boards are still surrounded by eager crowds. Thomas, Independent, for Governor, has carried Shelby County by a majority of 2,800, Hardman County by 149, and Haywood County by 1,800. Porter, Democrat, for Governor, has carried Weakley County by a majority of 1,100. Young, Democrat, is selected in the Tenth Congressional District by a majority of 900.

THE MAJORITY IN MASSACHUSETTS.

The Congressmen elected, with their estimated majorities, are as follows: District No. 1, W. W. Crapo, of New-Bedford, Rep., re-elected, 7,200 majority; District No. 2, B. W. Harris, of East Bridgewater, Rep., re-elected, 4,600 majority; District No. 3, Benjamin Dean, Boston, Dem., 42 majority—(charges of fraudulent voting are made here, and the seat may be contested;) Fourth District, Leopold Morse, Boston, Dem., 900 majority; Fifth District, Nathaniel P. Banks of Waltham, Rep., re-elected, 1,400 majority; Sixth District, Dr. George B. Loring, of Salem, (Rep.,) 1,930 majority; District 7, Gen. B. F. The Legislature is said to show a majority for Boutwell's re-election to the Senate.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

BOSTON, Nov. 8.—Returns from 332 towns, embracing all but eight small ones, in a mass give Hayes 143,912; Tilden, 105,535; Rice, Rep., for Governor, 131,480; Adams, Dem, 103,020; Baker, Prohibition, 11,868.

The Seventh District complete stands Butler 12,060; Tarbox, 9,425; Hoar, 2,028.

The election in the Third Congressional District is so close that many doubts have been raised as to the election of Dean over Field, (Rep.,) and a belief that there have been inaccuracies in the counts of some of the wards have caused the friends of Field to decide upon petitioning the Board of Aldermen for a recount.

CONNECTICUT.

LARGE MAJORITIES IN BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGISLATURE CONCEDED BY THE DEMOCRATS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARTFORD, Nov. 8.—The Democrats concede that the Legislature will be Republican in both branches, the House by at least twenty majority. Hon. Lynde Harrison is again returned to the House from Guilford, and will undoubtedly be elected Speaker if he desires it, though his services will be missed from the floor. With the Legislature against him Gov. Hubbard will probably have a good chance to exercise the feeble veto power which is given to the Executive of this State, a majority only being required to override it. There are several matters of vital importance which the Republicans will have to attend to. When the Democrats obtained full control of the Legislature in 1874, for the first time in over twenty years, they gerrymandered the cities of New-Haven and Norwich and other places. Out of pure partisanship they restored certificate voting, by which it is possible to perpetrate the grossest frauds. They gave to inferior courts power to issue naturalization papers, thus enlarging the machinery to create fraudulent voters. They provided for night sessions of Boards of Selectmen to secure the admission of electors of doubtful qualifications. They so shaped the Registry and Election laws that the constitutional amendment requiring electors to be able to read from the Constitution, or statutes was practically nullified by permitting men to be admitted by reading from Irish primers, with no certification that the dialect meant anything. They repealed the enactment requiring aliens to appear before the State Court in the county where they reside, and in various other ways they tampered with wholesome laws for the sole purpose of intrenching themselves in power by a deliberate system of legislation which encouraged evil-doers and advanced the partisan interests of the Democratic Party. All this bad work must be undone, not to give the Republican Party fair play, but to secure to the people of the State an honest vote. This Legislature ought also to fortify the ballot-box against fraud and repeating, by additional legislation, providing for a moderate poll-tax, to be paid at least thirty or sixty days before election, the production of the certificate that such a tax has been paid to be demanded in every case of challenge or of doubt as to the qualification of the elector. Such an enactment will place Connecticut in the line of many other States in which honest and intelligent men have felt the need of protection against fraud, and there is probably no doubt that the legislation proposed will be carried forward, though it must be expected that the Democratic leaders will make a savage protest against it, which of itself will be one of the most powerful arguments in favor of the measure.

It will strike some persons as strange that the Republicans should be able to overcome the immense Democratic majority in the Legislature, while losing the State on the popular vote. The explanation is in the fact that the vote in the country has been honest and untrammeled. The large corruption fund employed here each year of late, by which Barnum bought his own and Eaton's seat in the United States Senate, has in this election been chiefly confined to the cities, to bring out the corruptible vote, and in bringing out this vote, repeaters have been encouraged to work that will astonish the people of the State if the facts can be produced. It was an open boast by one drunken Democratic rough yesterday, that in one ward in this city a hundred names were used for repeating.

EXCITEMENT IN WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—Washington City is to-night in a fever of excitement, which has been continually growing in intensity since the receipt of the midday dispatches throwing doubt upon the result of the Presidential election. Previous to that time the success of Tilden and Hendricks having been almost universally conceded, private manifestations of disappointment, gloomy dejection, and alarm were prevalent among the thousands of Government employes in the Executive departments; but the afternoon dispatches inspired fresh hope among them and the Washington Republicans generally, and have had the effect of crowding the streets in the vicinity of all news centres throughout the evening until nearly midnight. Members of both parties give free expression to their doubts of the results while patiently, though with intense anxiety, awaiting further returns; and, aside from the usual noisy comments and vociferous cheering of partisan crowds, there has been no disorder or public disturbance.

FATAL POLITICAL SHOOTING AFFRAY.

ILLEGAL VOTING IN PROVIDENCE.

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 8.—John O'Donnell was arraigned before United States Commissioner Douglass to-day for fraudulently personating an elector and voting. He pleaded guilty, and was committed for want of bail for trial before the United States District Court.

GOV. HAYES RECEIVING THE NEWS.

HE IS ASSURED OF HIS ELECTION TO THE PRESIDENCY—HIS UNASSUMING QUIETNESS DURING THE EXCITEMENT YESTERDAY—A BRIEF SPEECH.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 8.—During all the heated canvass of the last few months, Gov. Hayes has maintained the dignified reserve which characterized his course prior to the nomination. At home and in the Executive office, he has continued to be as before, accessible to all who chose to call upon him, and while always apparently ready to converse upon the questions entering into the canvass, he has persistently declined every opportunity to influence the campaign by letter-writing, speech-making, or by taking any part whatever in its direction. It is not too strong language, nor does it seem inappropriate, to say that his quiet, manly bearing, and evident purpose to leave the machinery of the campaign and all that had to do with his elevation to the Presidency in the hands of the people, without any interference or effort at management on his part, has at once attached his friends more firmly to him and intensified their confidence in his peculiar fitness for the most exalted station in the Republic. No instance is known here where, out of the hundreds of formal and informal calls made upon him as the Republican candidate for President, including men of either party, journalists, citizens of distant States, and persons of all classes in society, one left his presence with other than a favorable impression of him. Personally he has never appeared over-sanguine of election, and usually replied to his intimate friends, both before and after the October elections, that "our chances were a little the best;" or, using his favorite phrase, "We have a fair fighting chance." With frequent opportunities for observation, your correspondent has never heard him refer or allude to his own position or personal relations to the contest; but when its bearings were discussed his attitude has been always that of one individual of several millions, acting in a common interest. Especially does it seem that his accession to the Presidency, and the kindly conservative policy toward the South which is sure to follow, will be worth millions to its material interests and be priceless in influence toward a good understanding between the two sections.

At the October election Gov. Hayes went home to Fremont to vote the Republican ticket. It was characteristic of him that yesterday he remained quietly at his residence in this City. Last evening the returns received at head-quarters were taken to his house, and after scanning such as came before midnight, he went off to his night's rest, while hundreds and thousands of his fellow-citizens thronged the streets for hours afterward in anxious solicitude as to the result. To-day he has had few callers beyond his immediate circle of personal friends, and his equanimity was apparently undisturbed while the streets were resounding with shouts for Hayes or Tilden, as the bulletins seemed to favor either. The little speech which the regular press report will give you, made in response to the crowds who gathered in front of his house after the dispatch of Mr. Chandler had been read at the Republican Head-quarers, was in the direct line of his cautious and at the same time appreciative manner. This evening Gov. Hayes has received such definite assurances regarding the States of the Pacific coast and the Gulf States as to impress him with the reasonable certainty of his election.

BOLD ATTEMPT TO ROB THE TOMB.

AN ORGANIZED SCHEME TO STEAL PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S REMAINS—THE MONUMENT AT SPRINGFIELD TO BE BROKEN INTO—DESPERATE EFFORT OF A NOTED COUNTERFEITER TO SECURE HIS OWN RELEASE FROM THE PENITENTIARY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—The announcement this morning that a gang of ruffians had attempted to remove the coffin containing the remains of Abraham Lincoln from the Sarcophagus, in the monument at Springfield, causes considerable excitement in this city, and was the subject of much comment to-day. An inquiry into the facts of this singular case show that prior to the time that Mr. Elmer Washburne was invited to resign his position as the head of the Secret Service Bureau by the President, he had obtained information from Detective Tyrrell, of the secret service in Chicago, that there was an attempt to be made to remove the remains of Abraham Lincoln from the monument at Springfield. The most extraordinary part of this disclosure was the agency the friends of old Ben Boyd, the notorious counterfeiter, now serving a ten-year's term in the Illinois Penitentiary, had in the proposed scheme of villainy. Ben Boyd was captured by Elmer Washburne some time ago, and a gang of counterfeiters, such as seldom obtain a foothold in the State, was broken up. Boyd, through the agency of his friends and his own wealth, has, for some time past, been trying to liberate himself from prison. The shrewd scheme was to carry off the remains of Mr. Lincoln, secrete them and keep them until President Grant should be compelled to give Boyd his freedom, conditioned on the restoration of the remains to their former resting place. The information thus obtained was conveyed to Leonard Swett, Esq., and Col. Robert Lincoln, both of this city, and steps were taken to frustrate the plan. Mr. Swett stated to-day that while many people might think this desecration of the tomb of Mr. Lincoln a mere job "put up" by parties for selfish interests, they were greatly mistaken. He believed there was a well, concerted plan on the part of these desperate men to secure possession of these remains.

"THE FLYING DUTCHMAN."

FIRST PERFORMANCE IN AMERICA.

EXCELLENT REPRESENTATION OF HERR WAGNER'S OPERA IN PHILADELPHIA—OUTLINE OF THE STORY AND ANALYSIS OF THE MUSIC—INDICATIONS OF FAVORABLE RECEPTION BY AMERICAN AUDIENCES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—The first performance in America of Richard Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" was given at the Academy of Music this evening, under the direction of Mr. G. Carlberg. The opera produced a very marked impression and can scarcely fail to occupy a prominent place in the current repertoire.

"The Flying Dutchman," which was written by Herr Wagner under the influence of recollections of a stormy voyage on the Baltic Sea, was performed for the first time in Dresden in 1843. It is divided into three acts. The first progresses on the rock-bound coast of Norway. The ship, commanded by Dalando, has just come to an anchorage, and the sailors are busy furling the sails. Dalando has gone ashore; he climbs the cliff to discover, if possible, his whereabouts, and finds that he is only seven miles from home, but must wait the changing of the wind south to carry his vessel safely into the harbor. Thereupon he tells the crew to go to rest, and details the helmsman to remain on watch. The young sailor, to dispel his drowsiness, begins a sailor song, but soon dozes away. The storm rises anew, and far off the Flying Dutchman, with black masts and blood-red sails, is seen approaching the shore at full speed. As soon as she touches land, the Dutchman, Vanderdecken, springs ashore, and in a grand aria narrates how he is doomed to roam the ocean in his ship. He is only allowed to set his foot on land every seven years, to seek his release, through the self-sacrifice of a true loving heart; if he cannot meet such a one, he must return to his ship and await his fate. He muses in silence, when Dalando appears from his cabin and, seeing the strange vessel, awakes his helmsman, and summons the Dutchman to give the name and flag of his ship. They enter into a conversation, in the course of which the Dutchman asks shelter in the house of Dalando for one night, and offers in return therefor a chest full of diamonds. Dalando, who is most avaricious, accepts the proposal, and is highly pleased when afterward the stranger demands his daughter in marriage. The conversation between the two skippers is brought to an end by the change of the wind, which will convey the Norwegians homeward. The Dutchman promises to follow them immediately, and upon this the curtain falls.

The second act is carried on in a room in Dalando's house. In the background is the portrait of a pale man with dark beard and black Spanish costume. Maria, the nurse of Senta, and a bevy of pretty maids, are sitting around the chimney, spinning. Senta, in an arm-chair, gazes dreamily on the picture. The act opens with a spinning chorus, which gives way to a ballad referring to the legend of the Dutchman, This Senta is asked to sing, much to the dissatisfaction of Maria. During the ballad, Senta becomes so excited that she acts as though beside herself. Her companions are alarmed and scream for help. Erik, Senta's lover, appears at this point, and tells them of the arrival of Dalando's ship. The maids run out to welcome the sailors, leaving Senta and Erik alone. Erik reproaches Senta with her conduct, and proceeds to relate a dream in which she and the pale man are connected. But she is too excited to give heed to his words, and he goes forth in despair. Soon the door opens and Vanderdecken and Dalando enter. The Dutchman is first. Senta's gaze turns from the picture, she utters a piercing cry, and remains transfixed. Vanderdecken, with his eyes fastened upon Senta, advances. Dalando, meanwhile, approaches Senta, and presents the Dutchman. Then comes a grand scene in form of a love duo, in which Vanderdecken tells Senta of his dream, and implores her love and constancy as means of his redemption. To this she replies, consenting, and the act ends.

The scene of the third act represents a bay with a rocky coast. On one side stands Dalando's house. Beyond lie close to each other the two vessels—the Norwegian and the Dutch craft. The Norwegian ship is lighted up, the sailors are feasting and making merry. The Dutch vessel offers a strong contrast to her neighbor; an unnatural darkness enwraps her, and death-like silence reigns aboard. Suddenly the sea, hitherto calm, begins to heave around the Dutch vessel. A gale rises and whistles through her rigging, and the crew, invisible before, now come to life. Erik, who, with Senta, has seen the strange sights taxes the maid with infidelity. Vanderdecken catches his last words, and, breaking forth into excited lamentations, declares his identity. With the words "The Flying Dutchman am I," he jumps aboard his vessel, which swiftly glides from the shore into deep water. Senta then rushes to a steep rock overlooking the sea and flings herself into the waves. At the same moment the Dutch vessel sinks with all her crew. The waters rise and subside again. In the glow of sunrise the forms of Senta and the Dutchman are seen ascending from the wreck, each folded in the other's arms.

The music which Herr Wagner has wedded to this story is uncommonly beautiful and dramatic. It is not, indeed, of the severe type of the composer's latest works, but it makes up in charm and variety of color for what it may sometimes lack in massiveness. It is, in truth, pure Italian music, arranged for orchestral performance by a band that has no rival in the science of instrumentation. The themes are of the utmost suavity, but the scoring is as clearly traceable to the composer of "Lohengrin," as are the numbers of "Die Walkure." An achievement the excellences of which are at once appreciable, is the result of this combination of Italian attractiveness and German power, and hence the prediction as to the success which "The Flying Dutchman" is likely to have in the United States. The opera is rich in what we must call "points," for want of a better word, and in spite of the composer's present objections to the existence of anything like points in a complete work of art. The concerted pieces and choral passages which have been banished from his later productions are resorted to by Herr Wagner throughout "The Flying Dutchman," and although it must be conceded that the fruit of the musician's recent years may approach more closely to the truth of nature than the masterpieces of the Italian school, it cannot be denied that much time must elapse before an audience of culture, even, will give the preference to "Der Ring des Nibelungen," for example, over the offspring of the composer's more youthful genius.

In January next Mr. Carlberg intends to bring his artists to New-York, and there will then be ample opportunity to review both the opera and its representation in detail. From its first public rehearsal in America, however, some account of its merits ought to be attempted. The brief overture to "The Flying Dutchman" is well known in the concert-room. It is in shape of a stormy prelude, in which the substantial writing for the strings is vigorously accented by the blasts from the brass, indicative of the swift passage of the phantom ship over the angry waves. Suggestions of the sailors' chorus, of the spinning chorus, and of the plaintive motive in which Senta refers to the fate of the wandering mariner, interrupt the growling of the sea, which gradually subsides as the introduction comes to a close. After a short dialogue in recitative the pilot has a pretty and unpretentious ballad, contrasting forcibly with the music accompanying the appearance of Vanderdecken, whose narrative of his sad fate is in recitative of great breadth and force, and ends with a fine climax. In the duet between Vanderdecken and Dalando is noticeable a melodious and passionate outburst where the Wanderer, in the themes of the opera and the utterances of the characters, discovers the possibility of escape from his destiny, and the act concludes with a scene of exceptional life and color, the sailors' songs, mingling harmoniously with the recitative, while each of them retains its characteristics, blending into an impressive whole. The second act is the most important of the three. It begins with the spinning chorus, which will be remembered as full of melody and suggestiveness, and bound up with this number is Senta's ballad—a most tuneful and illustrative number. Further on, Erik has a little romance in the lightest of Italian styles, and the scene closes with the grand duet between Vanderdecken and Senta, at certain stages of which the voices unite with a delightful effect, and every note of which has its meaning. An admirably written sailors' chorus, followed by a chorus for female voices, the festive chants of the Norwegian crew contrasting forcibly with the weird shouts of Vanderdecken's sombre host, another decidedly Italian romance for Erik, and some melodious measures for Senta and Vanderdecken, constitute the third act of the opera.

Mr. Carlberg's artists interpreted "The Flying Dutchman" with precision, spirit, and vigor. It is no light task to bring out one of Herr Wagner's works, and when the task is satisfactorily accomplished, more than ordinary commendation can fairly be claimed. After conceding to Mr. Carlberg a large measure of praise for producing "The Flying Dutchman" as he has done, and supplying an excellent orchestral performance of its very exacting music, it is only just to say that the largest share of the honors of the evening were borne off by Mme. Pappenheim, whose Senta was lyrically and dramatically a most finished personation. We cannot imagine better singing and acting than this lady's throughout the second act, nor do we recall any personation more symmetrical or artistic in the matter of detail. Vanderdecken was represented by Mr. Preusser, who phrased tastefully, and whose performance was continuously intelligent and energetic. Signor Baccei, an Italian tenor—and mention ought to have been made ere this of the fact that an Italian version of the libretto was given—sang the tuneful pieces allotted to Erik with much warmth of manner and skill in delivery. Mr. Sullivan was an acceptable Dalando and Mr. Morgan a feeble pilot. Mr. Carlberg's chorus proved to be numerous and vigorous. The gentleman seems to be especially favored in the possession of good female voices. The orchestra, under his baton, was steadily equal to its duties. It only remains to add that due attention had been paid to the stage costume of "The Flying Dutchman," the ship being notably realistic, and the dresses being appropriate and brand new. The applause was frequent while the opera progressed, and the singers were summoned before the curtain at the close of each act.

COUNT CHARLES VON HOWARD.

THE FINDER OF LONG-LOST WILLS—BORROWING MONEY UNDER PECULIAR CIRCUMSTANCES—FIVE YEARS' PENAL SERVITUDE.

From the London News, Oct. 27.

On the faith of a mysterious will the prisoner, who was yesterday convicted, had contrived to extract within a very short time two sums of £380 each from intelligent English gentlemen. The prisoner was put up for trial under the name of Charles Howard, alias the Count Von Howard. As the Count Von Howard he seems to have lived unsuspected for some months in a German hotel. The Count had other names. He was Herr von Howard-Seefeld, and he was Mr. Judford, and he took care to have what Falstaff wished for, a commodity of good names always on hand. His principal mode of operation seems to have had a bold simplicity about it. He wrote to somebody in England, telling him that he had found a long-lost will, by virtue of which great sums of money ought to come to the person addressed, and he asked for £380, and in two instances at least he got the money. This was the sum of his operations, but of course he wrapped his proceedings up in somewhat more of mystery. He wrote, for example, to Mr. John Harvey, a merchant in Upper Thames street, and the prosecutor in yesterday's case, informing him that in 1870 a man of wealth had died leaving a will under which Mr. Harvey would be entitled to a considerable sum of money. The writer signed himself "F. C. Judford," and explained that he had in some strange and providential way become acquainted with the fact that such a will had actually been found; that it would have been destroyed by interested persons but for the foresight and care of the present holder; and that the holder, who had entrusted these facts in the strictest confidence to the writer, only wanted a modest percentage for himself. The writer assured Mr. Harvey that this important statement was only confided to that gentleman in the profoundest reliance upon his secrecy and honor, and that if he would pledge himself to discretion at that stage of the correspondence everything should be gradually made clear and satisfactory. Mr. Harvey did pledge himself to these preliminary conditions of secrecy, and then the correspondence went on. When it had reached a certain stage the mysterious Mr. Judford explained that the holder of the will wanted £380 as his percentage, but he pledged his honor that no coin of this money, if paid over to him, should pass out of his hands into those of the holder of the will, until the latter person had first placed in the hands of the incorruptible Judford the precious testament itself, and the other documents necessary to make good Mr. Harvey's rights. Mr. Harvey believed all these statements, relied upon the honor of Mr. Judford, and forwarded the money. In one sense Mr. Judford probably kept his word. He promised that until the will was forthcoming he would not give the money to any other person, and we have no doubt that he retained it for his own use. The will did not make its appearance, and Mr. Harvey had only in the end to apply to the police. Somewhere about the same time, Capt. Williams, who formerly represented Barnstaple in Parliament, was taken in by the same person in the same way, and fleeced of an equal sum of money.

The prisoner seems to have been pursuing such a career of fraud for several years. He appears to have lived by writing letters to people and obtaining money from them on all manner of fraudulent representations, and to have organized his whole existence into a sort of mechanism for such purposes. America is said to have had the honor of giving him birth; but he was for three years employed in our War Office under a different name or string of names, and therefore he may be supposed to have acquired some of his education in this country. He had a variety of ingenious devices for having his letters posted from places where he was not then living, so as to render it hard for the police to get at him. This very craft proved injurious to him yesterday, for it appeared that some of his letters which purported to come from a writer living on the Continent had actually been written in this country, and thus all difficulty about the jurisdiction of the English Court was got over. Yesterday closed his career for a considerable time. For the one charge which was brought under the jurisdiction of the court he was sentenced to penal servitude for five years, and to remain under the supervision of the police for five years more. He had in other ways, as well as the plundering of the incautious, imitated the career of Capt. Macheath and other famous figures of robbery's more romantic and daring days. It would seem that Polly and Lucy and various other credulous young creatures were deluded by the arts of the Count von Howard. The delusion in these cases is less surprising than in the others. The incarceration of the Count von Howard saves society for a while from him; but we venture to think that if he had as many comrades as the famous captain in the Arabian Nights, the whole thirty-nine might in succession play the same pranks, and still find dupes and victims.

MASSACRE OF A SHIP'S CREW.

Capt. McDonald, of the schooner Star of Fiji, has given the following particulars of the murder of the master and crew of the Dancing Wave at the Florida Islands, in the Solomon Group: "The Dancing Wave, chartered by a pearl-fishing company in Sydney to recruit labor for their pearl fisheries, and commanded by Capt. Harrison, arrived in Makira Harbor, Solomon Group, in May, and engaged an American negro named Freeman as recruiting master, also a boy belonging to Makira. She left for the Island of Guadalcanar, recruited twelve laborers, and stood for the small group of islands, [the Floridas,] came to anchor, and began recruiting. The men on board all spoke English. As each man consented to accompany the vessel he received a tomahawk or knife as an acknowledgement of the engagement. Soon after the natives, with a yell, sprang upon the crew and commenced hacking them frightfully with the tomahawks, while one seized the last ground sharp from the hand of the carpenter and planted it in his head. The Captain fared no better, for as he was writing a name in the book he was struck down. He, with the mate, steward, and one of the crew, managed, amid the blows that were showered upon them, to get down to the cabin, where the Captain expired. The steward got a revolver and shot himself. The mate said, 'I am dying, and I will do the same.' The seaman got a rifle, loaded it, and fired through a porthole. Immediately after he heard the report of another gun or revolver, and on turning round saw that the mate also had shot himself. He then lost all self-possession, and going on deck jumped overboard. By a strange coincidence the shot thus fired killed the chief in command of the murderous assailants, who thereupon used all speed in getting clear of the vessel. The vessel was subsequently found windbound at Guadalcanar. The seaman who was the sole survivor was wounded in several places, having received a blow on his head and a large gash on each shoulder, and an injury with a bolt on his spine."

TWENTY-SEVENTH NIGHT OF RAMAZAN.

The troubles in the East do not appear to have affected the celebration on the 14th of October at Constantinople of the "Kadir-guedjessi," or "Night of Predestination and Power"—the twenty-seventh night of Ramazan. Prayers then offered up are supposed to have greater efficacy than on any other day during the twelve months. The illuminations and fire-works on the evening of this festival were, according to the Levant Herald, unusually brilliant. The handsome minarets of the Tophaneh mosque stood out splendidly incased from base to summit in rich-colored oil lamps, and all the vessels of the iron-clad fleet rode at anchor like fairy phantoms with their hulls and rigging outlined in light, some with the ordinary bright blue lights and others with lights of different colors, presenting a graceful and dazzling variety. The Sultan arrived by water at about 7:30 o'clock, and, after prayer at the mosque, took his iftar, or Ramazan evening meal, in company with several of the Ministers in the Imperial kiosque in the Artillery square. His Majesty then walked for some time on the esplanade, watching the discharge of fire-works from rafts in the Bosphorus—a fine display—and finally returned again by water to the palace of Dolmabaghtché. On going and coming the Sultan was saluted by the guns of the iron-clads and the batteries on the Asiatic and European shores. There was a dense Turkish concourse of both men and women witnessing the spectacle, and, no doubt, musing on all the strange events that have happened since the last celebration of the "Night of Predestination and Power," and all that may happen before it is celebrated again.

THE GOVERNOR ELECT.

SERENADE TO HON. LUCIUS ROBINSON AT ELMIRA—HIS SPEECH IN RESPONSE.

ELMIRA, Nov. 8.—Gov. elect Robinson was serenaded this evening by his fellow-citizens, and in response to calls, made the following speech:

FRIENDS AND NEIGBORS: I thank you for this expression of your kindness, and join my congratulations with you upon the triumph of the people in the election. It was not a triumph of men, but of causes of principles and measures vital to the honor and prosperity of the whole country. The contest has been attended with intense excitement, much of it arising from honest indignation at the gross abuses proved to exist in the administration of the General Government, and honest differences of opinion as to the best mode of correcting them. If our views are true, as we sincerely believe them to be, then our victory is not for the benefit of a party alone, but of all men of all parties. Let us, then, make it our first duty and pleasure, now that the conflict is over, to exclude all inordinate excitement and passion, and to forgive offenses, join hands as friends and patriots, having a common interest in the good government of our common country. Let us hope also that we have witnessed for the last time the effort to rekindle the fires of sectional strife: that henceforth past differences may be forgotten; that peace and good-will shall take their places, and that the flag of the Union shall protect alike all who follow and defend it. This is no occasion for a speech. I will not, however, omit to say that the men who have been chosen as the agents of the people cannot fail to give their best efforts to the cause of reform in all the departments of the Government, with rigid economy, retrenchment, and the reduction of the burdens of taxation. To this they are pledged by every sanction that can bind the honor and conscience of men. They will redeem their pledge. In conclusion, I hope you will pardon a few words of personal reference to you and to myself. This is the eighth time I have been before the people of Chemung County for election to high and important offices, and never on any occasion have they failed to give me a decided majority, usually far above my party strength. In voting for me now for the highest office in the State, you have undoubtedly conferred your suffrages on me for the last time. I desire to say to you, therefore, before returning to my post of duty, that to the last day of my life I shall hold in grateful remembrance these repeated expressions of confidence and kindness by the people of this county, among whom I am happy to have my home. I know that the most satisfactory return which I can make to you will be an honest and fearless execution of the high trust which has been committed to my hands.

KILLED WITH AN UMBRELLA.

On Monday evening last Richard O'Keefe, aged thirty, residing at No. 445 West Forty-first street, and John Fitzsimmons, residence unknown, quarreled in a liquor-store kept by Mathew McCormick, at the corner of Eighth avenue and Forty-first street. During the altercation O'Keefe thrust the ferrule of his umbrella into one of Fitzsimmons' eyes, injuring him to such an extent that he died at 2 P. M. yesterday at Bellevue Hospital. The occurrence was reported to the Twenty-ninth Precinct, and Detective Schmittberger arrested O'Keefe last evening. Jeremiah Dynan and Mathew McCormick were taken into custody as witnesses. An autopsy of the body will be made to-day by Deputy Coroner MacWhinnie, and Coroner Croker will hold an inquest.

FRIENDLY EXCHANGES.

"THE QUIP MODEST."

From the World of Tuesday.

We republish with regret and reprehension a communication from the New-York Daily News concerning the Sun newspaper, Mr. Calvin, and that excellent criminal lawyer, Mr. Bartlett. We lament that the editor of the News should not have learned from the Sun itself that Mr. Bartlett's connection with that paper is not editorial, but moral; that he is in fact its guide, philosopher, and friend, encouraging it in the paths of virtue and courtesy, and warning it off the devious ways of slander and impertinence. Communications like these tend to sour the milk of human kindness in the editorial bosom, and we only trust that Mr. Bartlett's advisory powers may suffice to restrain the Sun from saying unpleasant things of the Daily News.

"THE COUNTERCHECK QUARRELSOME."

From the Sun of yesterday.

Does the editor of the World desire a personal controversy with us? It would seem so. Yet, before responding to his invitation, it is perhaps proper to notify him that it may be something pretty serious for him.

From Simeon Marquart, Esq., of Owego, N. Y.

Some years since I was attacked with a severe and distressing cough, the long continuance of which much alarmed me. From what I had heard of WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY I concluded to give that preparation a trial, which I did, and by its use obtained immediate and permanent relief. Again about five years ago I was taken with a severe hacking cough, accompanied with pain in the chest and side, tickling in the throat, &c., which so reduced my health and strength as to unfit me for attending to my ordinary business. I applied to well-known physicians, and used their prescriptions without any perceptible benefit; when, after having been confined to my room for several months, I again had recourse to WISTAR'S BALSAM, and to my great joy found, as before, immediate relief, and two bottles restored me to perfect health.

Fifty cents and $1 a bottle. Sold by all druggists.

Convenient and Simple.

"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" are a simple and convenient form for administering, in combination, several medicinal substances used by physicians, in the treatment of Bronchial Affections and Coughs. The Troches seldom fail to give relief.

The word "Sozodont," which is fast becoming a household word, is derived from the Greek, and composed of two words, Sozo and Odontes. "Sozo," translated, means to preserve, and "Odontes," the teeth—"Sozodont," a preserver of the teeth. And it is true to its name. For beautifying and preserving the teeth, hardening and invigorating the gums, and correcting all impurities of the breath, it is without a peer in the world.

TILDEN'S MAJORITY OVER 18,000—THE VOTE FOR GOVERNOR AND CONGRESSMEN—THE LOCAL OFFICERS ELECTED.

The following tables give the vote in Kings County on the Presidential, State, County, and City tickets. All the returns have not yet been received, but the missing figures cannot change the result. The defeat of the Republican County candidates is undoubtedly owing to the fact that they run on the State ticket. Counting Mr. Shannon A. Slocum, Democrat, who was indorsed by the Republicans, the latter have a majority of 1 in the Board of Aldermen. The Republicans retain their majority in the Board of Supervisors.

RECEIVING THE NEWS.

SCENES IN PRINTING-HOUSE SQUARE—ENTHUSIASM OVER THE RETURNS FROM DOUBTFUL STATES.

The excitement in the City over the results of Tuesday's election showed no sign of abatement yesterday. At the clubs, hotels, and other places of public resort, the crowds of eager inquirers jostled each other in their anxiety to learn the news; and from an early hour Printing-house square was thronged with excited partisans, each side claiming a victory, and cheering each scrap of election news lustily. In the forenoon the Democrats were jubilant over the prospect of Tilden's election, but as the hours wore on, and returns began to look favorable for the Republicans, the Democracy stopped cheering and betook themselves to thoughtful pondering upon the situation. The States upon which public interest was most concentrated were the doubtful ones—Florida, South Carolina, Louisiana, Wisconsin, and Oregon. Without the votes of these States it was plain that Hayes would be defeated and the Democracy consoled themselves with the reflection that it would be well nigh impossible for the Republican candidates to carry them. At 12 o'clock noon a dispatch was received at the TIMES office announcing Republican gains in Florida and a strong probability that the Republicans would carry the State. The appearance of this dispatch on the bulletin elicited enthusiastic applause from hundreds of persons who had assembled at the corner of Park row and Nassau street. This dispatch was followed by another from the Chairman of the Republican State Committee of Wisconsin, claiming the latter State for Hayes by 4,000 majority. Inside and outside THE TIMES building a vast throng of enthusiastic Republicans collected and gave vent to their enthusiasm in cheers and songs. At 2 P. M., when satisfactory assurances had been received that Nevada, Oregon, and Florida had in all probability gone for Hayes, the result of the Electoral vote was displayed on THE TIMES bulletin as follows:

Hays, 185.
Tilden, 184.

The announcement was greeted with storms of cheers, repeated again and again, and the utmost excitement prevailed. Long after dark the throngs in front of the office continued to assemble, and hearty rounds of cheers testified to the sincerity of their rejoicing over the result.

The scene in the counting-room of THE TIMES when the news of the probable election of Hayes was displayed was of the most enthusiastic description, cheer upon cheer being given for Gov. Hayes and Hon. Edwin D. Morgan. The returns from Florida, South Carolina, and Louisiana were displayed in the evening in front of the main entrance by means of a calcium light, and attracted large numbers of spectators up to a late hour in the night.

The sale of THE TIMES yesterday was enormous, thousands of copies having been printed in addition to an unusually large edition.

IN WALL AND BROAD STREETS.

THE SCENES AMONG BUSINESS MEN AND BROKERS—GENERAL INTEREST IN THE RESULTS AT THE EXCHANGES.

Although Wall street yesterday wore the same air of busy activity that is always one of its marked features, it was apparent, even to the most casual of observers, that the interest in the election results was sufficiently intense to divert the attention of the bulls and bears in some measure from their usual occupation. This general interest in the one great topic of the day, while it was less demonstrative than that evinced by the crowds of spectators which crowded around the different newspaper offices, was none the less eager. Throughout the day knots of brokers congregated in front of the prominent banking-houses, and for once their conversation was directed not so much to the rise and fall of stocks as to the rise and fall of parties. Fortified with newspapers with which to enforce their arguments, each little group of men discussed the situation according to its own peculiar notions. Although the majority insisted on the election of Tilden, there were others who were willing to back an opposite opinion with money. The same interest in the result that was noticeable in the crowds on the street, was also manifested within the walls of the Stock Exchange building. Watching the members, as they gathered in different parts of the rooms and conversed in low tones, it was easy to see that the topic of their discussions was the universal one of how the election had resulted. The sentiment of the body, although evidently of a Democratic complexion, was still sufficiently divided to lead to many warm debates, and the staking of occasional wagers.

At the Produce Exchange the sentiment of the members was also divided, the majority favoring the opinion that the Democrats had been victorious. The Republican members, however, insisted that the result was too uncertain to justify positive assertions of Democratic success. As at the Stock Exchange, bets were made, from time to time, that Hayes would be found to have been elected when the official returns should have been announced. The rapidity of the sale of newspapers was really surprising, even taking into consideration the fact of the great anxiety everywhere manifested on the results. Many "extras" were issued during the afternoon, and the newsboys, quick to take advantage of the general desire for news, doubled the price of their papers without the least hesitancy or scruple, and insisted upon the payment of the additional amount, without any misgiving that their numerous customers would complain of the extortion. Small bulletins were displayed from time to time during the day in front of the Stock Exchange building, but, though they were read with eager interest, they rather increased than diminished the popular uncertainty and doubt. Indeed, the uncertainty increased with the posting of each fresh bulletin, until, when the Stock Exchange closed, only the most partisan Democratic members insisted that the question of who was to be the next President had been settled beyond doubt. Later in the day many of the frequenters of the business exchanges tried to add to their stock of information by joining the crowds assembled in Printing-house square and on Park row to watch the newspaper returns posted on the bulletin boards.

POOLS ON THE ELECTION.

The somewhat unexpected developments of yesterday thoroughly aroused the activity of the betting fraternity, and the scenes at the different pool-rooms last evening were unusually exciting. The excitement was intense during the afternoon, and as the evening wore on, and no positive news had been received, it increased. Morrissey's and Johnson's rooms were crowded almost to suffocation. Those whose faith in the strength of the Democratic candidate had caused them to offer large odds on him began to "hedge" as rapidly as possible on finding that the result was doubtful, but there were, notwithstanding, many Tildenites who offered $100 to $10 that he would be elected. The offer found abundance of takers. While on the night before the election the pools generally favored the Democratic nominees, last night there was a marked sense of insecurity among the betting men. At Johnson's, during the early part of the evening, Gen. Hayes sold as high as $30, Tilden's average remaining at $100. Considerable betting was done on the result in the doubtful States, odds being freely offered and taken on both sides. At Morrissey's pools were sold on the State elections in South Carolina, Wade Hampton selling at $100, and Gov. Chamberlain bringing from $50 to $75.

A SHOOTING AFFRAY.

Edward Rooney, of No. 225 East Forty-first street, became involved in an altercation with James Boylan, of No. 221 East Thirty-eighth street, Tuesday evening, in the course of which Rooney left with the avowed purpose of procuring a knife to continue the fight. Boylan saw him return, and thinking he was about to assault him, drew a revolver and fired two shots, which took effect in Rooney's abdomen and right leg. Rooney was conveyed to Bellevue Hospital, and the house surgeon states that he is in a precarious condition. Boylan, on seeing Rooney fall, fled, but was subsequently arrested by Officer Darwin, of the Twenty-first Precinct. In the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court yesterday Justice Wandell committed him to await the result of Rooney's injuries.

A BATCH OF SUICIDES.

Thomas Kerr, aged fifty-eight years, committed suicide by taking a dose of arsenic yesterday at his residence, No. 152 Madison street, in consequence of his inability to procure employment.

James Harrington, aged fifty-five, a laborer, attempted to commit suicide yesterday morning by cutting his throat with a razor in a stable near his residence, in Ninety-first street, between Madison and Fifth avenues.

George R. Bentler, aged fifty, of No. 155 Second street, died suddenly yesterday morning, under circumstances which lead to the supposition that he committed suicide by taking a dose of poison. Coroner Ellinger was notified to hold an inquest.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

It is stated that Thomas T. Hazard was not discharged from A. T. Stewart's store on Monday because he participated in the Republican parade on Saturday last.

The first floor of No. 219 Madison avenue, the residence of G. Arnold, was damaged by fire last evening to the extent of $500. The fire was caused by a window curtain being ignited by a gas jet.

During an altercation last night, at No. 59 Mulberry street, between David McLaughlin, aged twenty, of No. 40 Mulberry street, and Paul Bowman, of No. 59 Mulberry street, the latter stabbed his adversary in the abdomen. The wounded man was taken to the Chambers Street Hospital, and his assailant was locked up at the Sixth Precinct Station.

A telegram was received at Police Headquarters last night from the Penitentiary at Blackwell's Island, announcing that a prisoner named Robert MacLaughlin, alias "Scotty," who was recently convicted of a charge of larceny, escaped by swimming the river at a point between Fiftieth and Sixtieth streets. The fugitive is thirty-two years of age, and when arraigned at court gave his occupation as a steam-boat man.

William Middleton, a seaman, of No. 24 North Oxford street, quarreled with a neighbor named John Tully, a varnisher, on Tuesday evening. During the quarrel Middleton was severely cut in the neck with a razor.

John Hurley, of No. 990 Atlantic avenue, and Lawrence Wilber, of No. 496 Carroll street, painters, were severely injured yesterday by the breaking of a scaffold on which they were working at No. 558 Washington avenue. They were taken to the City Hospital in an ambulance.

Margaret O'Brien, residing at No. 552 Court street, quarreled with her husband yesterday afternoon, and shortly afterward attempted to commit suicide by taking Paris green. A physician was summoned and administered an antidote, and the woman was removed to the Long Island College Hospital.

John Jones, of No. 562 Smith street, went into Dieter's restaurant, on Washington street, last evening, and after taking dinner refused to pay for it. Mr. Dieter attempted to prevent him leaving the place, whereupon he drew a pistol and threatened to shoot, but was arrested and locked up in the First Precinct Station-house.

Officer William Savage, of the Tenth Precinct, was brutally assaulted on Tuesday night, by three or four roughs whom he found acting in a disorderly manner in Fifth avenue, near Prospect place. The Police arrested Michael Kane, a laborer, residing in First street, near Fifth avenue; William Murtagh, aged twenty-two, of No. 921 Atlantic avenue, and James McCuen, of No. 273 First street, who were recognized as the officer's assailants, and were held for trial.

NEW-JERSEY.

The body of Arthur Mooney, who was drowned in the Delaware and Raritan Canal at Trenton, was recovered yesterday.

Hubert Dunsmore, of Elizabeth, while shooting at Bergen Point yesterday, had his arm severely lacerated by the accidental discharge of his gun.

THE MISSING DRUGGIST.

HIS BODY FOUND IN THE NARROWS AND TAKEN TO FORT HAMILTON—HIS FUNERAL YESTERDAY.

On the evening of Oct. 21 Mr. Bernard H. Reinhold, a well-known druggist, doing business at No. 639 Third avenue, corner of Forty-first street, and residing at No. 334 East Fifty-first street, left his house at about 8 o'clock for the avowed purpose of taking a walk, and, as far as can be at present ascertained, was not again seen alive. Mr. Reinhold was a native of Hesse-Cassell, Germany, about fifty years of age, and was well known among his countrymen in this City, where he had been engaged in business for a number of years. He was President of the German Apothecaries' Society, had been Vice President of the College of Pharmacy, and was also a member of Crescent Lodge No. 402 Free and Accepted Masons. When he left his store, as stated above, he is supposed to have had between $200 and $300 in cash on his person, and a gold watch and chain. His continued absence alarmed his friends and relatives, who gave notice to Superintendent Walling of the occurrence. The entire Police force were notified to make search for the missing man, and cards containing a description and photograph of Mr. Reinhold were distributed throughout the City, besides being sent to the Police authorities of all the principal cities of the United States. The efforts of the Police and the friends of the missing druggist proved unavailing, and no trace of the man from the time he left the store could be obtained. A reward of $250 offered by his friends for any information of his whereabouts produced no better result. On Sunday last the body of a stranger was found floating in the Narrows, and was brought ashore at Fort Hamilton. The Justice of the Peace of that village made an examination of the remains. The body was so much decomposed that the features were unrecognizable, and it was removed to the Morgue, in Brooklyn, for identification. It was there recognized, by the watch and ring found on the body, as that of Mr. Reinhold, and the relatives were accordingly notified. The remains were removed to his late residence. There were no marks of violence on the body except a severe contusion on the back of the head, but it has not been ascertained whether the injury was inflicted before or after death. A small sum of money and the watch were found on the body, but the gold chain which the deceased usually wore was missing. From the fact of the missing chain, it is believed by the friends of Mr. Reinhold that he was waylaid, robbed, and thrown overboard. They say that the deceased had not the slightest motive to commit suicide. The mysterious affair is being investigated by Superintendent Campbell, of the Brooklyn Police force, aided by several New-York detectives.

The funeral of the deceased took place yesterday from his late residence, and was attended by a large number of his friends and acquaintances, including members of the College of Pharmacy, the German Apothecaries' Society, and the Masonic fraternity.

THE UNITED STATES INSURANCE COMPANY

A motion was made yesterday before Judge Pratt, in the Supreme Court, Kings County, to vacate the order granted a few days ago by Judge Gilbert, in the suit of Francis B. O'Connor against the United States Life Insurance Company and others, for the examination of the defendants before the trial, in order to ascertain who should be made defendants in the action, the complaint in which has already been published in THE TIMES. The action is brought to prevent the transfer of the affairs of the company to a life insurance company in Maine, and alleges that the defendants, James Buell, President of the company, and John C. De Witt, a stockholder, have entered into a conspiracy to make such transfer. The plaintiff bases his right to bring the suit on his ownership of nine shares of the stock of the company. Affidavits were presented by the defendants denying that O'Connor is a stockholder in the company, and asserting that he does not appear on the books as such, though it is believed that he is Trustee for his wife, who really owns the shares claimed by plaintiff. Therefore, as plaintiff does not own any of the shares of the stock, and does not appear as such owner on the books of the company, he has no right to bring the suit. Hence the motion to vacate the order should be granted. Plaintiff's counsel contended that his client had a legal right to bring the action, and that the order granted by Judge Gilbert was nothing more nor less than his legal right, defined by statute. Justice Pratt took the papers, and reserved his decision.

SUIT AGAINST A JUNK-DEALER.

The Erie Railway Company has brought suit in New-Jersey against Sigmund Dringer, before Vice Chancellor Van Fleet. The defendant is a junk-dealer, who held a contract with the road to purchase their old iron, brass, car-wheels and axles. It is charged that through complicity with Henry S. Bowman, the Purchasing Agent of the road, Dringer took from the company much more than he paid for. Among other things it is charged that after having had a car-load of scraps weighed, he loaded the car with additional iron and did not pay for it, and that through fraud he at one time took 170 or 175 bars of steel from the Susquehanna shop and paid for them as scrap. Detectives were employed to work up the case, and an injunction was issued restraining Dringer from selling any goods in his possession which had belonged to the road.

THE NATIONAL VICTORY.

THE REPUBLICAN MAJORITIES EVERYWHERE INCREASING.

DETAILS OF THE TRIUMPH.

THE CERTAINTY OF THE ELECTION OF GOV. HAYES AND WILLIAM A. WHEELER TO THE PRESIDENCY AND VICE PRESIDENCY—8,000 MAJORITY IN SOUTH CAROLINA, 8,000 MAJORITY IN LOUISIANA, AND 2,000 MAJORITY IN FLORIDA.

Though the official returns which would place the matter beyond controversy have not yet been received, there is now no doubt that Gov. Hayes has been elected President. All our special reports received during the past twenty-four hours from the disputed States in the South render it certain that they have gone Republican. When the official count has been completed, it will be seen exactly how large the majorities are; but at present they can only be estimated. Our latest dispatches give a Republican majority of 2,000 in Florida, a Republican majority of 8,000 in Louisiana, and a Republican majority of at least 8,000 for Gov. Hayes in South Carolina. Wisconsin had been persistently claimed by the Democrats, but they have conceded the State now, and it stands unchallenged in the Republican column. The dispatches from Oregon and Nevada also confirm the previous reports of 1,000 to 1,500 Republican majority in Oregon, and 1,000 Republican majority in Nevada. The list of twenty-one States which THE TIMES has steadily held to as being the correct presentation of Gov. Hayes' vote in the Electoral College, we again present below.

Our later dispatches make some changes in our record of the membership of the next Congress. The Fourth District in Alabama has elected a Democrat, the Ninth Illinois has chosen a Republican, and the Tenth a Democrat; the Second and Fourth Louisiana have chosen Republicans, and the Thirty-second New-York a Democrat, Judge Spaulding being defeated by a small majority. In the Nineteenth Illinois District Mr. William B. Anderson, independent Democrat, is defeated by the regular Democratic candidate. In the Eighteenth District of Pennsylvania the re-election of Mr. Stenger, Democrat, is claimed by the Democrats, and in the Tenth District of Virginia the Democrats claim the election of their candidate. Conceding these, the figures stand: Republicans, 143; Democrats, 147; to be elected, 3.

FLORIDA SURELY REPUBLICAN.

THE ENTIRE REPUBLICAN TICKET ELECTED BY OVER 2,000 MAJORITY—LARGE REPUBLICAN GAINS OVER THE VOTE OF 1874.

Special Dispatch to the New York Times.

JACKSONVILLE, Nov. 9.—Official returns from nineteen counties report a Republican majority of 4,727. There are twenty counties to hear from, which gave a Democratic majority in 1874 of 3,151. Allowing the Democrats their majority of 1874, and the indications are that it will not be increased, the Republicans elect their entire ticket by fifteen hundred and seventy-six majority. The following are returns by counties as far as heard from:

Counties.	Rep. Maj.	Dem. Maj.	Rep. Gain.	Dem. Gain.
St. John's	....	180	51	....

* Several Republican precincts to hear from.

This shows a Republican majority in the nineteen counties heard from of at least 4,754, a net Republican gain of 849 over the vote of 1874. If the remaining twenty counties yet to be heard from show Republican gains in proportion to the counties given in the table above, Gov. Hayes' majority will be at least 2,200.

Jefferson County gave in 1874 a Republican majority of 359. The official returns from this county are not yet in, but the majority will be 100 better.

The Republicans have certainly carried the State by a handsome majority, and we "hold the fort." Florida greets the nation, and conducts Hayes to the White House.

PETER JONES,
Secretary Republican State Committee.

THE VERY LATEST.

LARGE REPUBLICAN GAINS IN FIVE COUNTIES—THE STATE ABSOLUTELY CERTAIN FOR HAYES, WHEELER, AND STEARNS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TALLAHASSEE, Nov. 9.—Five of the most populous counties give 6,000 Republican majority, a large gain, which it is impossible for the Democratic counties to overcome. Many close counties show small Republican gains. The vote for the State and electoral ticket is about even, except in Duval County, where the electoral ticket leads a little over 100. The State is certainly safe for Hayes and Stearns. Purman, Republican, is elected to Congress in the First District.

Returns from twenty-three counties give Republicans four thousand five hundred majority, thirteen counties yet to hear from.

M. MARTIN,
Chairman Republican State Committee.

NEVADA SURE FOR HAYES.

THE STATE CARRIED BY THE REPUBLICANS BY 1,000 MAJORITY.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 9.—A Virginia City (Nev.) dispatch says: Hayes' majority is certainly not less than 1,100. A Republican Congressman, and a Republican Judge of the Supreme Court are elected by, perhaps, 1,000 majority. There is no doubt about these figures.

VIRGINIA CITY, Nov. 9.—From the best information obtainable, Nevada gives a Republican majority of about one thousand.

SOUTH CAROLINA CERTAIN.

THE STATE SAFE FOR HAYES AND WHEELER BY 8,000 MAJORITY—GOV. CHAMBERLAIN'S VIEWS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBIA, Nov. 9.—The official count has been received from only nine out of the thirty-two counties in the State. These nine counties, together with the most accurate attainable estimates and reports from the remaining twenty-three counties, give not less than eight thousand Republican majority in South Carolina. The Democratic dispatches are based on their estimates of counties not officially returned, and they cannot be true. except by great fraud, resulting from causes which will defeat all such apparent results. We do not fear a reduction below the above figure on the final and honest vote and count.

D. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

DISPATCH FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE STATE COMMITTEE—GOV. CHAMBERLAIN RE-ELECTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBIA, Nov. 9.—Enough returns have been received from the various parts of the State to show that it is sure for Hayes, Wheeler, and Chamberlain, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding. A majority of several thousand for Hayes is certain.

R. B. ELLIOTT,
Chairman Republican Executive Committee.

From Our Special Correspondent.

COLUMBIA, Nov. 9.—As the vote comes in from the up country of South Carolina it becomes evident that great frauds have been attempted by the Democrats, but they will not be able to overcome the majority for Gov. Hayes. Gov. Chamberlain has just sent the following dispatch to friends in the North:

Our exact majority can only be ascertained by an official count, but you can rely upon it that any returns reducing it below 8,000 are the result of frauds, which will be defeated.

D. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

Gen. Elliott, Chairman of the Republican State Committee, is confident that Gov. Hayes' majority will be at least eight thousand. The Democrats all over the South are losing hope. Both parties are anxious and throng the telegraph offices for news.

LOUISIANA SURE FOR HAYES.

PACKARD'S MAJORITY EIGHT THOUSAND—THE DEMOCRATS CONCEDE THE STATE TO HAYES AND WHEELER.

Special Dispatch to The New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 9.—Packard comes to the city with 16,000 majority, being 8,000 in excess of the Democratic majority in the city. The heavy Republican parishes are now coming in, and the leading Democrats here admit they are beaten, despite their violence in Ouachita, Morehouse, Richland, and East Feliciana.

A. J. DUMONT,
Chairman Republican State Committee.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 9.—The late returns are even better than we expected from the remote parishes. Be easy so far as Louisiana is concerned.

W. P. KELLOGG.

MOST ENCOURAGING RESULTS—REPUBLICAN MAJORITIES LARGER THAN EXPECTED—DESPERATION OF THE DEMOCRACY—LIEUT. GOV. ANTOINE'S HOUSE BURNED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 9.—The Democratic papers here publish returns claiming the State, and giving the votes alleged to be cast in parishes from which it is, humanly speaking, impossible that any communication can have been received, as they are far removed from railroad, river, or telegraph. From every parish from which authentic returns have been received up to this hour, (11 P. M.,) the results are most encouraging. Our majorities are larger than we expected, the Democratic majorities are smaller. Had the five Parishes of Ouachita, Morehouse, East Feliciana, West Feliciana, and East Baton Rouge, been permitted to cast their usual vote, which even in 1874, on the heels of the White League riots, gave us 3,707 majority, Hayes and Packard would have carried the State by at least 15,000 majority. As it is, while we have undoubtedly carried the State, our majority will be 8,000 smaller. Our fear is that, acting under the instructions of Tilden's advisers, the Democrats will set to work to destroy the evidence of the election before the votes can be officially tabulated. They have already commenced to do this by destroying five boxes in Madison Parish, which gave Hayes and Packard 2,150 majority. Fortunately, in this case, the record of the votes cast has been preserved.

An accurate statement of results throughout the whole State cannot possibly be arrived at before Saturday, but the desperate measures which the Opposition are already resorting to, show that they know we have carried the State. Lieut. Gov. Antoine's house in this city has just been burned to the ground.

A. J. DUMONT,
Chairman Republican Committee.

THE STATE SURELY REPUBLICAN.

The following dispatch was also received at the Republican National Head-quarters last night:

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 9, 1876.

To Hon. Z. Chandler, Chairman:

Latest returns from Tensas Parish give 2,800 Republican majority; Concordia Parish, 2,800 Republican majority. The Democratic majority in the City of New-Orleans is 9,600. Dispatches from Lafayette Parish indicate a falling off of nearly one thousand in the Democratic majority in that parish. There are a number of distant parishes still to be heard from, but the most careful estimate leaves the State Republican, by a handsome majority, even counting the votes of the five parishes in which the election was a sham.

A. J. DUMONT,
Chairman Rep. Campaign Committee.

THE REBELLIOUS DEMOCRATS BREAK INTO A PARISH COURT-HOUSE AND DESTROY THE BALLOT, BUT IT HAD ALREADY BEEN COUNTED.

The following dispatch was received by the National Committee at midnight last night:

The returns are still favorable. I have just received information that at Delta, Madison Parish, opposite Vicksburg, the White Leaguers broke into the Court-house, and destroyed the ballot-boxes and the returns from several polls which the law requires to be deposited with the clerk. Fortunately, we had counted all but one poll, and have the original returns. Gov. Hayes has 2,150 majority in that parish, a gain of over five hundred over the vote of 1874. I have this moment received the vote of Tensas Parish, which gives Gov. Hayes 2,792 majority, a gain of more than two hundred.

W. P. KELLOGG.

DEMOCRATS ATTEMPTING TO "FIX THINGS" IN LOUISIANA—A PAIR OF THEM ON THE WAY TO NEW-ORLEANS.

The following dispatch was received at the Republican National Head-quarters last night:

To Hon. Z. Chandler:

Packard's majority in Madison parish is 2,200. After the official count had been made and returned, five boxes containing 1,400 votes were seized and destroyed."

Watterson and Beck left Louisville to-night for New-Orleans. The Democratic leaders here are desperate at the certain loss of the State by not less than 8,000 votes.

J. R. G. PITKIN, United States Marshal.

PENNSYLVANIA.

A REPUBLICAN MAJORITY IN THE COUNTIES WITHOUT PHILADELPHIA—THE CONGRESSIONAL GAINS—THE GREAT INTEREST IN THE NATIONAL CONTEST.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 9.—Pennsylvania, according to the latest returns, will settle a disputed question by giving a Republican majority outside the City of Philadelphia. The Republican counties continue to show great gains, as the full votes are announced, and Lancaster has gained her old position in the lead of Berks by more than two hundred Republican majority greater than the Democratic majority in their great stronghold. Nutting, for Congress in Schuylkill, is defeated by eighty-one votes. The election of Mahon, the other doubtful gain noted last night, is claimed by 200. With both defeated the gain is 7. Nutting was defeated by frauds, which may perhaps be reached under the State laws. Otherwise the result stands as reported last night.

There is great excitement at the reversal of the returns for the National ticket since yesterday, and at midnight thousands of people are still on the streets. The universal belief is that Hayes is elected, but the belief is mingled with a great desire of assurance about Florida and one or two other States. The Democrats shouted and paraded last night, but they shout no more, and the Republicans are delaying, for confirmation doubly sure, to make the grandest demonstration ever seen in this city.

MAJORITIES BY COUNTIES—3,657 NET REPUBLICAN GAIN IN FORTY-THREE COUNTIES.

Full returns from forty-three counties in this State show Republican gains on the Presidential ticket, compared with the vote for Governor last year, of 11,612. The Democratic gains in these counties are 7,955, making the net Republican gain 3,657.

RESULT IN THE CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 9.—J. B. Reilly, Democrat, is elected to Congress from the Thirteenth District by a majority of 81.

The election of Stenger, Democrat, to Congress from the Eighteenth District, is claimed by a majority of 54.

Hiester Clymer, Dem., is re-elected to Congress in the Eighth District by a majority of 7,245.

VIRGINIA.

GREAT EXCITEMENT IN RICHMOND—THE RESULT IN THE CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS.

RICHMOND, Nov. 9.—The excitement here has been unabated to-day, and almost all business is at a stand-still. The most intense feeling prevails. As Associated Press and other telegrams are made public, the large crowds about the newspaper offices, Democratic and Republican head-quarters, receive them with loud and continued cheering. A vacillating feeling has pervaded the multitude, which has been regulated by the tone of the various dispatches, favorable or unfavorable to either side. Additional returns from the State confirm last night's dispatch in relation to Tilden's majority and the Congressional delegation, except in the Fourth District, which, it was reported, would probably elect Jorgensen, a Republican. The reported returns from all counties in that district but three, give Hinton, Democrat, over three hundred majority. It is believed the remaining counties cannot change the result. This will make the Virginia delegation solidly Democratic.

CONNECTICUT.

FULL RETURNS—THE DEMOCRATIC MAJORITIES ON THE NATIONAL AND STATE TICKETS—DEATH OF A MEMBER ELECT OF THE LEGISLATURE.

HARTFORD, Nov. 9.—The full Presidential vote of Connecticut is for Hayes, 58,929; for Tilden, 61,918; for Cooper, 352, and for Smith, 247. For Governor the vote stands: Robinson, 58,397; Hubbard, 61,920; Atwater, 655, and Cummings, 724. The total Presidential vote is 121,446, and the Gubernatorial, 121,696. The Prohibition vote was mainly cast for Hayes, but held to its own State ticket.

Mr. Simon H. Norton, of Plantsville, a prominent citizen, who was elected to the State Legislature on Tuesday, died to-day, aged sixty-five years.

THE RESULT IN MICHIGAN.

TWENTY THOUSAND MAJORITY FOR HAYES—THE CONGRESSIONAL RETURNS—THE RESULT IN WAYNE COUNTY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

DETROIT, Nov. 9.—The majority for Hayes in this State will certainly be 20,000 and probably 25,000. On the State officers it will vary from 10,000 to 20,000, as three of the Republican candidates ran against men on both the Democratic and Greenback tickets. The Republican candidate for State Land Commissioner was also heavily cut, and will run far behind. The total Greenback vote of the State seems to have been about five thousand. The State Legislature, with only two or three districts in doubt, stands: Republicans, 74 Representatives and 24 Senators; Democrats, 26 Representatives and 8 Senators. The Republican majority on joint ballot is 64. In the Congressional districts the reported majorities are: First, Williams, Dem., 1,500; Second, Willets, Rep., 2,000; Third, McGowan, Rep., 3,500; Fourth, Keightley, Rep., 2,000; Fifth, Stone, Rep., 4,000; Sixth, Brewer, Rep., 1,500; Seventh, Conger, Rep., 3,000; Eighth, Ellsworth, Rep., 350; Ninth, Hubbell, Rep., not known, but certain to be large. In the upper peninsula, where Tilden's iron mining operations took place, there has been a political revolution in every county—all of them usually Democratic—and giving good Republican majorities. Our aggregate gain in the Lake Superior region over the vote of two years ago is several thousand. Each member of the Legislature elected from that region was, two years ago, a Democrat, and this year all are Republicans. This is the most remarkable feature of the vote in this State. Fuller returns from this county have elected Coots, Republican, for Sheriff by about one hundred majority. The heavy Democratic gain in this county is due to naturalization here last year of over twelve hundred Polanders, who were marshaled openly by Roman Catholic priests, and, under such guidance, voted the straight Democratic ticket.

THE VOTE IN OHIO.

THE MAJORITIES AND GAINS IN FIFTY-NINE COUNTIES—A NET DEMOCRATIC GAIN OF ONLY 452—THE STATE SURE FOR HAYES.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 9.—It is still impossible to get reliable returns from Ohio by counties. The majorities and gains in fifty-nine counties, thus far heard from semi-officially between the two State committees, are as follows:

MISSOURI'S CONGRESSMEN.

A GAIN OF FOUR BY THE REPUBLICANS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 9.—The election of three Congressmen from St. Louis, and one from the Tenth District, is conceded. This is a gain of four.

CHAUNCEY T. FILLEY.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 9.—Complete returns from the Third Congressional District give it to Metcalf (Rep.) by thirty-one majority. The Democrats claim the Sixth District for Morgan by 700 majority. This district was previously reported as probably for Havon. The Republicans carry their County ticket in this county, except for Probate Judge, Public Administrator, and Assistant Prosecuting Attorney. Emil Thomas leads his ticket for Sheriff, by 3,500 majority over ex-Mayor Brown, and the remainder of the Republican candidates have an average majority of 1,500.

WISCONSIN.

FIVE THOUSAND MAJORITY FOR HAYES.

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 9—Midnight.—The Republicans will have 18 majority in the Assembly, and 11 in the Senate. The majority for Hayes in the State will exceed 5,000.

KENTUCKY.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 9.—Returns from the doubtful Ninth District of Kentucky indicate the election of Turner, Dem., to Congress, in which case the entire delegation from this State will be Democratic. Advices from the interior lead to the belief that the majority in Kentucky for Tilden will be fully 75,000.

MINNESOTA.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 9.—Complete returns from forty-two counties, and partial returns from the remaining thirty, show that the Hayes majority in this State will be about 18,000. In the First District, Dunnell, Rep., for Congress, has a majority of 8,500; Strait, Rep., in the Second, has about 3,000 majority, and Stewart, Rep., in the Third, has from 1,200 to 1,500 majority. The Legislature, on a joint ballot, will be nearly or quite two-third Republican.

ARKANSAS.

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 9.—The streets are crowded with people awaiting the returns. Tilden and Hendricks' majority in the State is about thirty thousand, although the vote is much smaller than at the October election. The election of three Democratic Congressmen is conceded, namely: Gause in the First District, Slemmons in the Second District, and Gunter in the Fourth District. In the Third District Stuart, Dem., is defeated, and an official count is required to decide the election between Cravens and McClure, Rep.

OREGON'S REPUBLICAN MAJORITY.

1,500 CLAIMED BY THE REPUBLICANS—500 CONCEDED BY THE DEMOCRATS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PORTLAND, Nov. 9.—Rely with positive certainty on Oregon for Hayes. The majority is 1,200. It can't be reduced. Every precaution has been taken to prevent frauds.

H. W. SCOTT,
Member National Republican Committee.

PORTLAND, Nov. 9.—Oregon is undoubtedly Republican by 1,500 majority. Democrats concede it by 500.

JOSEPH SIMON,
Chairman County Committee.

PORTLAND, Nov. 9.—Indications are that Oregon will give 1,000 Republican majority. It is sure for 800.

H. W. CORBETT.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov 9.—No actual figures can be given for Oregon, but the Chairman of the Republican State Committee telegraphs that the State is sure for Hayes and Wheeler by 1,000 majority. A dispatch from Portland says the Democrats now concede that the State has gone for Hayes by from 500 to 800. Mr. Gorham received a dispatch this evening, signed by Senator Mitchell and Congressman elect Williams, stating that Senator Kelly concedes the State to the Republicans by 800 majority.

ILLINOIS GOES REPUBLICAN.

A MAJORITY OF 20,000 INDICATED—THE CONGRESSIONAL RESULT.

CHICAGO, Nov. 9.—There is no reasonable foundation for the claim that the Democrats have carried Illinois. Careful comparison of returns received with the highest Democratic vote cast in 1872 indicates 20,000 Republican majority. Two gains of Congressmen have been made in "Egypt," the Democratic stronghold, and the Republicans have gained some members of the Legislature also from that section, which would be an impossibility if the Democrats had carried the State. The vote registered shows an enormous increase over 1872. Of the increase the Democrats got a greater per cent. than the Republicans in the ratio apparently of about sixty to forty.

The following is the Congressional result in Illinois: The Republicans elect Aldrich in the First District, Brentano in the Third, both gains; Lathrop in the Fourth, Burchard in the Fifth, Henderson in the Sixth, Hayes in the Seventh, a gain; Fort in the Eighth, Boyd in the Ninth, Tipton in the Thirteenth, a gain; Cannon in the Fourteenth, Wiley in the Eighteenth, a gain, and possibly Ashcroft in the Sixteenth, over Sparks, the present incumbent, which is a certain gain of five Congressmen, and possibly six. The Democrats elect Harrison in the Second District, Hungate in the Tenth, Knapp in the Eleventh, Springer in the Twelfth, Eden in the Fifteenth, Morrison in the Seventeenth, Townsend in the Nineteenth, and possibly Sparks in the Sixteenth.

CALIFORNIA.

ALLEGED ELECTION FRAUDS IN SAN FRANCISCO—THE STATE GIVES HAYES A MAJORITY OF 5,000.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 9.—There has been a great deal of talk about frauds in the city election, and the Board of Supervisors have authorized the Finance Committee to investigate the matter after the returns have been canvassed. The frauds are alleged to have been perpetrated through the medium of certificates on which parties voted who applied for registration too late for their names to go on the regular registry.

The returns thus far received give Hayes 5,400 majority, which additional returns are not likely to vary. For Congress, Davis and Page, Rep., are certainly elected, and Pacheco, Rep., is thought to be elected in the southern district, running considerably ahead of his ticket. In the Fourth District the contest is very close and indecisive, and both parties claim the election of their respective candidates for Congress.

The facts are that the Board of Supervisors directed the Finance Committee to take charge of the certificates of registration, affidavits, and other registration documents, and at once proceed to investigate the matter. This is supposed to have been the result of a conference between Mayor Bryant, Gov. Irwin, and the Board of Supervisors. The County Clerk refused to surrender the documents, on the ground that he was the sole legal custodian. Subsequently the Mayor, the Chairman of the Finance Committee, A. G. Abell, Chairman of the Republican State Committee, United States District Attorney Coughlan, George C. Gorham, and a number of prominent Republicans and Democrats held a conference at the Mayor's office, the result of which was that the demand for the documents was withdrawn, and it was decided that they should remain in the County Clerk's vault until the returns are canvassed on Monday next, after which the Finance Committee will proceed to investigate. The Committee consists of two Democrats and two Republicans, and it was agreed that nothing should be done except in full committee, and that the investigation should be public. The matter occasioned considerable excitement during the afternoon, and charges and counter-charges were freely made by both parties.

MAINE.

HAYES' MAJORITY IN 312 TOWNS OVER FOURTEEN THOUSAND.

AUGUSTA, Nov. 9.—Official returns from 312 towns give Hayes 57,684 and Tilden 43,492. The Governor has renominated A. W. Wildes, of Skowhegan, for Railroad Commissioner.

NEW-HAMPSHIRE.

HAYES' MAJORITY OVER THREE THOUSAND.

CONCORD, Nov. 9.—Returns from 229 towns give Hayes 41,507, and Tilden 38,272. The remaining six towns last March gave Cheney, Rep., 86, and Marcy, Dem., 237.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Dispatches from a Democratic source.

RALEIGH, Nov. 9.—Additional returns from the western part of the State continue to show Democratic gains. The counties yet to be heard from are Democratic and the majority will certainly reach 15,000.

ALABAMA.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

MONTGOMERY, Nov. 9.—The Democrats carry the State by a reduced majority and every Congressman. In the Fourth District, Jones has about one thousand plurality over Bromberg and Turner. In the Fourth, Shelly has two or three hundred plurality over Haralson and Rapier.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

MONTGOMERY, Nov. 9.—Enough returns have been received to show at least 35,000 majority for Tilden and an unbroken delegation of Democrats to Congress, Shelly, Dem., has a majority of 177 in the Fourth District; Rapier, (colored,) and Haralson, (colored,) divide the Republican vote in this district between them. This makes a gain of two Democratic Congressmen in this State.

INDIANA.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 9.—Returns from sixty-two counties in full and twenty counties in part show Hayes' majority over Tilden to be 2,761, which is a Democratic gain of 590. The places to hear from gave a Democratic majority of 8,490 in October.

DAKOTA.

YANKTON, Nov. 9.—The election returns come in slowly but indicate larger Republican majorities than ever given before. Yankton County gives a total vote of 1,407, giving Kidder, Rep., for Delegate, over Spink, a majority of 107. All the county Republican ticket is elected except one. The outside counties give Kidder a large majority, which will probably reach 3,000.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

HOW HE RECEIVED THE RETURNS.

INCIDENTS OF THE ELECTION NIGHT SIXTEEN YEARS AGO.

Correspondence of the Chicago Tribune.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Nov. 6, 1876.

The excitement of the present election recalls in a measure the scenes in this city sixteen years ago, when Abraham Lincoln was the Republican candidate for the Presidency. His personal popularity, and the local pride that a great party had selected him as its standard-bearer, rendered the contest peculiarly interesting to all of us. Even Democrats had learned to respect Mr. Lincoln for his integrity and manliness, and though they familiarly called him "Old Abe," and even by titles less respectful, there was an inward sense of pride in one who, of all others, most truly represented the best type of American manhood. This respect cropped out in many tokens of personal regard. There was many a curious scene between Mr. Lincoln and his old neighbors, and while the latter fairly worshiped the ground he walked on, they could scarcely realize that the man with whom they had been so familiar, and who received them with all the freedom of old friends, was really to be the President of these United States.

Shortly after his nomination Mr. Lincoln was prevailed upon to remove his office to a room in the State-house, adjoining the office of O. M. Hatch, then Secretary of State. Here he spent most of his time receiving his friends, attending to his correspondence, &c. There was a long line of visitors always in waiting, and in that room many plans were laid which were carried into effect after his inauguration. The derisive name of the "Rail-splitter" applied to Mr. Lincoln by the Democrats was turned into a compliment by his friends, and from all parts of the North there came elegantly-made wedges, sections of rails labeled "Democracy for Mr. Lincoln to split," buck-horn chains, ox chains highly ornamented, and other symbols of a woodman's occupation. These presents amused Mr. Lincoln hugely, and he invariably acknowledged their receipt by an autograph letter. As the day of the election progressed, the local politics of Illinois interested Mr. Lincoln, and it was curious to witness his remonstrances when friends of Republican candidates for local offices tried to secure his influence to assist their nominations. Their solicitations were resisted with uncommon good-nature, and the applicants turned away with a joke or story which always left them in capital humor.

Mr. Lincoln was accustomed to relate with great glee how many people had approached him with letters of introduction, and without them too, and informed him confidentially that they enjoyed the distinguished honor of having been the first to nominate him for the Presidency. He stated to the writer that seven States had already claimed the distinction, and, while he always thought that his Illinois friends had risen spontaneously and conferred the honor upon him, he had begun to think that a man living away down East in the State of Maine was really entitled to the precedence. This man had journeyed all the way from his New-England home, armed with affidavits to prove that, while Lincoln and Douglas were carrying on their famous joint debate for the Senatorship, this Maine party had formally proposed a resolution in a Republican club nominating him for the Presidency. "Strange to say," Mr. Lincoln added, "I never heard anything about it until two months after I was nominated, and when I had finished the affidavits I wondered what office the man expected after the election." It was worth a round sum to hear him tell this anecdote.

THE DAY OF THE ELECTION.

The morning of the election dawned clear, crisp, and cold—a regular November day, such as we who live upon the prairies can appreciate. The politicians, excepting those engaged in the local canvass, had all gone home, and Mr. Lincoln was comparatively quiet. Old Jesse Dubois and Secretary Hatch and a few others were frequently with him, and he had no lack of callers, but there was not such a rush as he was accustomed to on other days. Mr. Lincoln's bearing was excellent. He had a smile for everybody, though it was easy to perceive traces of the deep earnestness which he felt in the result. As usual, he remained in the State-house until noon, and then started home to his noon-day meal. The Republicans were hard at work at the polls, and the air resounded with the campaign songs, now almost forgotten. The Wide-Awakes were very active, and it was so evident that the Presidential ticket would get a majority that the only question was, how large would it be? As soon as his tall form was seen on the street, there was a fresh outburst of singing and a hip, hip, hurrah in which hundreds joined. It was only by his earnest request that he was permitted to go to his home unaided. The boys would have carried him on their shoulders if he would have permitted them. Upon his return from his home Mr. Lincoln informed his friends in the State-house that he was going to vote for the local officers. Wrapping his cloak around his shoulders he proceeded toward the polls, accompanied by the Secretary of State. His ticket had been previously prepared by cutting off the Presidential Electors and was otherwise "straight." As he approached the polling-place the crowd increased, and the idea of seeing a Presidential candidate vote seemed to have struck the people around the square as something too novel to be missed. An extra effort had to be made to clear a passage way so that he could approach the window. At first he took a place in the line, but the liners gave way one by one, and he advanced and handed in his ballot. There were yelling and hurrahs from the Republicans, cat-calls from the bummer Democrats, and a demonstration upon the part of everybody. Had Mr. Lincoln been some foreign potentate, never before seen in the country, greater interest could not have been manifested in seeing him at this time. Probably not twenty men were in that crowd who had not seen him a half a hundred times, but the election which made Mr. Lincoln its central figure in the nation made his presence as a citizen, casting his vote for his friends, dramatic and thrilling even to his neighbors.

RECEIVING THE RETURNS.

The people filled the Representatives' Hall to overflowing. There was an impression that Mr. Lincoln himself would be present, but he wisely refrained. During the day a private arrangement was made with J. J. S. Wilson, then Superintendent of the old Caton Telegraph Line, (now Division Superintendent of the Western Union in Chicago,) by which Mr. Lincoln and a few friends were to be allowed inside the telegraph office after 8 P. M. Prior to that hour he was half crushed by the crowds which surged in and out of the Secretary of State's office, congratulating him in advance. A few dispatches were received here from New-England and from precincts in Illinois, all favorable. There was also a dispatch from Simon Cameron announcing that the counting in Philadelphia indicated an immense majority, all of which was published to the crowd and cheered loudly. About 8 o'clock Mr. Lincoln was enabled to slip through a side door, while the front passage-way was cheering a dispatch announcing Republican gains in Indiana. He escaped to the telegraph office, then in a two-story building opposite the State-house, unseen by the crowd. Mr. Wilson, the Superintendent, had an extra force of operators busily receiving dispatches, and as fast as the figures were transcribed, they were handed to Mr. Lincoln for perusal. He read them aloud to his friends, and commented as he progressed upon their favorable or unfavorable tenor. The early dispatches were so disjointed that it was impossible to make much out of them. The returns from the certain Republican States were regarded as only confirmatory of previous expectations, and for a long time the conversation turned upon the votes of counties and precincts in Illinois. Every locality seemed familiar to him. When the votes from "Egypt" came in, he was quite earnest in his expressions of delight, and seemed to have remembered just how many votes were cast in each place at the prior election. Sometimes the figures would arrive giving the exact gains, and if they were at all incorrect Mr. Lincoln knew it at once. Many times he gave vent to such expressions as "That vote will elect —— to the House," or "that kind of gains will make —— Sheriff," or "One more such gain will give us another Congressman," and while he passed over scattering returns from Western States with silence, or at best a nod of approval, he almost invariably had a word to say about local returns from Illinois. When a dispatch arrived announcing that he had a majority in St. Louis, he exclaimed, "Well done, Frank Blair and Gratz Brown," little surmising that these two worthies would themselves be Presidential candidates on the enemy's side inside of twelve years. Thus the time wore on, and the returns seemed only to confirm and make sure previous hopes.

THE NEWS FROM NEW-YORK.

Just as it happens now, so it was sixteen years ago, that the vote of New-York seemed to the politicians to be the decision of the contest. It will be remembered that an unprecedented event in the history of the opposition occurred that year in the New-York canvass. There were three candidates—Breckinridge, Douglas, and Bell—opposed to Lincoln, and, though their respective adherents hated each other with ferocity unprecedented, they all hated Mr. Lincoln worse yet. It was in that State that the Southern Democrats showed their sagacity in managing the Douglas Democracy and the Native American leaders who were supporting John Bell, of Tennessee. These Southern demagogues outwitted Tammany Hall and all the unterrified Democrats of New-York by persuading them into a fusion movement by which a ticket of Presidential Electors was made up of an agreed number of partisans representing each candidate respectively. It was a shrewd trick, and had it been started early in the campaign, might have made trouble; but as it was, the fusion movement turned out a disastrous failure. Knowing that the Solid South was arrayed against him, it was recognized by Mr. Lincoln that he needed the New-York vote. He asked Mr. Wilson early on that memorable evening to try and get news from New-York. The only reports received were scattering returns from the interior of the State. There was a private message from Senator W. H. Seward giving a glowing account of the gains in his own neighborhood, and another from Thurlow Weed predicting a victory, but the news from the City of New-York was wanted. About 11 o'clock the first dispatch came. It was from Simeon Draper, (afterward Collector of the port of New-York,) announcing that the returns from sixty-three election precincts had been received, and with four exceptions showed such Republican gains as to justify an estimate of thirty-five thousand majority. This was so much better than was expected that there was joy upon all the faces present, and courage in every heart. Then there was a private telegram from the office of the Albany Evening Journal stating:

ALBANY, Nov. 2, 1860—11 P. M.

A. Lincoln, Springfield, Ill.:
The counties are coming in splendidly. St. Lawrence now estimated at 9,000. We will overcome any majority the Tammany managers can figure in the City.
Signed. ALBANY EVENING JOURNAL.

This was still more satisfactory, but about 12:30 another dispatch arrived from Simeon Draper, in substance as follows:

"Further returns from seventeen wards, including Democratic strongholds, reduce fusion estimated majority to 32,000—cannot exceed 34,000—which will give us the State by 25,000 sure."

Mr Lincoln gave a long sigh of relief as he read this, at first in silence and then aloud. By this time the room was nearly full. Lyman Trumbull had arrived at midnight from Alton, and entering the room, warmly embraced Mr. Lincoln, and said, "It is glorious." A hand-shaking all around took place amid the clicking of the instruments, and there would have been a scene if Mr. Lincoln, putting on his cloak, had not said, "Well, it's time I should go home and tell Mrs. Lincoln the news."

But it was not to be so soon. Ere he had left the telegraph office the news had been read to the audience in the State-house, and as that made it a sure thing, the people were wild with excitement. They poured out in the streets, yelling like Indians, and the cheers, hurrahs, and yelling were kept up all night. Mr. Lincoln was captured by a committee and taken to the upper room of a restaurant and confectionery, where an oyster supper had been spread. There were fifty women and as many men present, most of them his nearest neighbors. He was received with applause and hand-shaking till his inner man was nearly forgotten. However, he managed to take his allowance of edibles and carry on an animated conversation at the same time. After he had finished one enthusiastic girl boldly faced the President-elect and kissed him. This was the signal for others to do likewise, and in an instant the female portion of the audience was in an uproar, rushing toward Mr. Lincoln to give him kisses such as the Springfield girls of 1860 knew how to give. They tumbled the dishes so promiscuously that the managers proposed that a line should be formed, and each maiden and matron take her turn in the amatory exercise. This was speedily done and fairly carried out, excepting by one ardent miss still in her teens, who, having given Mr. Lincoln one kiss, took her place at the end of the line again and gave him a second without flinching. This entertainment broke up about 2 A. M., and it was after that hour that a few friends formed a body-guard and escorted the first Republican President to his dwelling.

It was well toward noon before Mr. Lincoln came down town the next day, and he immediately repaired to the public office of Secretary Hatch, where he remained nearly all day. A basketful of private telegrams had been taken to his house during the morning, and gave him additional assurance of his election. His friends from the surrounding country began to pour in by wagons and trains from all directions, and, as he knew everybody and everybody knew him, there was the same familiarity as of yore. He was particularly proud of his State and her Republican majorities, and spoke very freely of the handsome manner in which he had been treated by the strong Democratic counties. He chatted familiarly about the local candidates, and often inquired whether so and so had been elected, &c. Toward afternoon he began to weary of the avalanche of attention poured upon him, and his brow began to contract, and his face assume a more careworn and solemn appearance than he had shown at any moment since his nomination. Once or twice he remarked, "Now, boys, your troubles are over and mine commence," and he clasped his hands with an earnestness that indicated a realizing sense of the responsibility thrust upon him by the suffrages of his fellow-citizens. About 4 P. M. he bade the "boys" good-by, and retired to his home. His immediate friends, seeing that he needed repose, took pains to ward off further visitors that night. It was several days before he could fairly rest from the labor of shaking hands with the thousands who visited him, but in a week he began to resume a routine life, and make preparations to abandon his law practice to his associates.

A PLEASANT REMINISCENCE.

It would be an unpardonable omission in this recital if I failed to say that among Mr. Lincoln's old Springfield neighbors were many ardent Democrats. Some of them secretly voted for him on personal grounds, but the rest did not delay to congratulate him. Some of them said very frankly they had no sympathy with the Republicans, but they were glad the country had the prospect of an honest man at the head of the Government. The Douglas Democrats were incensed by the Solid South supporting Breckinridge, and they gave Mr. Lincoln every encouragement to believe they would sustain him in pulling down the then threatened rebellion. One of the earliest of these assurances came direct from Stephen A. Douglas himself, through a warm personal friend—an ardent Democrat. This utterance gave Mr. Lincoln a great deal of pleasure, and from that time forward he counted the Northern supporters of Douglas as his friends. The magnitude of the responsibility was warmly appreciated, and was the subject of deep and protracted meditation. The result has passed into history!

CATCHING A TURK ALIVE.

The correspondent of the London News writes: "The officers are always ready for any service of danger, no matter how reckless is the enterprise. Sometimes their zeal is eminently destitute of discretion, and they have been known to go out against the Turks in a spirit of fun in which there may be a slight element of vodki. One of the strangest of these 'larks' was undertaken after dinner at the instance of Cludoff, the eccentric Moscow merchant, who, without accepting a commission, and persisting in continuing a civilian, is always in the forefront of the fighting. He and a band of some thirty Russians started to have a look at the Turks on the other side of the Morava. They were on foot, and it was a bright moonlight night. One of the company was especially bent on catching a Turk alive. They crossed the neutral ground, and penetrated the Turkish foremost lines, laughing and shouting, but there was no 'alarm' on the part of the Turks, whose bad night watch is so notorious that it is inexplicable why advantage has not been taken of their chronic lâches in this military duty. At length the party met a solitary Turk, and the would-be captor of a live Turk went out with extended arms to catch his prey. The Turk declined to be thus captured, and fired at the Russian, grazing his cheek, whereupon one of the latter's friends shot the Turk, which act gave rise to a quarrel, owing to the disappointment of the man whose desire it was to catch a live Turk. Presently another Turk was encountered, also alone, and again the enthusiast after a live Turk went forward to grasp the prize. But this Turk also was not to be captured thus ignobly. He shot the Russian through the shoulder, falling himself a moment later, slain by a bullet from the revolver of another Russian. The Russian party then broke into two parts; one detachment went back with their wounded comrade, the other, numbering eight or ten, held straight on right through the heart of the Turkish position, across to Horvatovitch in his head-quarters at Veliki Siljegovac. A glance at the map will show how a bee-line drawn from Deligrad to Siljigovac must pass not alone through the Turk's foreposts, but right through the main positions. Horvatovitch, who is a strict disciplinarian, put the venturesome roisterers under arrest, and sent them back to Deligrad, where Tchernayeff, with a laughing reproof, released them. On the 21 of this month a band of seventy Russians—officers mainly—retook, under cover of darkness, and at the point of the bayonet, the order being not to fire a shot, a redoubt near Gredetin, held by two battalions of Turks, which had been taken from the Servians two days previously. The Turks, surprised, had time only to fire one volley, when the Russian bayonets, carried by officers as well as men, were into them, and they bolted like rabbits."

A FORTUNATE YOUNG FRENCHMAN.

From the London Telegraph, Oct. 27.

Leaving for awhile the remarkable adolescent whose inferred affluence so excited the sympathy and the cupidity of our fathers, we turn to a story told gravely and circumstantially in our Paris correspondence of yesterday. It is stated that a young man named Georges Martinengo, the native of a place called Norach or Noirac, who until lately had been employed as a clerk in his uncle's store at Marseilles, has just inherited, under the most extraordinary circumstances, a fortune amounting to 80,000,000 francs, or £3,200,000. Several years ago, the story goes on to say, a General of foreign origin died in Holland, leaving no apparent heirs. His large fortune was eventually swept into the coffers of the State. Nothing was heard for many years of the General's family or of his property; but recently the Dutch Government was informed by the French Minister of Foreign Affairs that the money of the deceased General was legally claimed by members of his family established at Marseilles and in Germany. To this is added the statement that some difficulties as to restitution were at first raised by the Cabinet of the Hague, but that it was ultimately fain to yield to the demands of international justice. The treasure has by this time accumulated to the prodigious aggregate of 159,322,800 francs, divisible between only two heirs. The Government of the Netherlands will, we learn, commence the unpleasant task of disgorging this enormous hoard by paying off 16,000,000, and ten years will have elapsed ere the entire amount due to the next-of-kin is liquidated. M. Georges Martinengo will not, however, be averse, we should say, from accepting a trifle of £640,000 "just to go on," seeing that there will remain a balance of £2,560,000 to come. The question as to the ultimate disposal of the £3,000,000—it is not worth while to mention the odd £200,000—will scarcely fail to assume the old familiar form of "what will he do with it?" The heir to the remaining moiety of what we may presume will be known as the Martinengo property may conveniently be dismissed from the calculation. The Germans are a cautious, thrifty, sober-minded race; and whether the fortunate Teutonic youth lays out his wealth in the purchase—against international contingencies—of Krupp guns, or devotes it to the acquisition of the island of Heligoland from the foreign intruders, or goes into partnership with M. Blanc at Monte Carlo, or with Herr Wagner at Bayreuth, we may be tolerably confident that the money will be well invested and will in time return a substantial profit. But eighty millions of francs in the hands of a young Frenchman, and that Frenchman one of the fiery Provencal race! What will he do with it?

BARGES ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

NEW DEVICES FOR CHEAPER GRAIN TRANSPORTATION — HIGH EXPECTATIONS OF PROFITS AND ADVANTAGES.

From the New Orleans Times, Nov. 6.

The experiments and experiences of the last few years in cheap river transportation, appear to have settled the convictions of leading river men in favor of the barge system for heavy freights. The definite results achieved in the coal trade within the last ten years have done more than anything else to demonstrate the great advantages of barges. The steady growth of the coal trade gradually developed the necessity of something better than the old-fashioned method of coal-boats in pairs, hundreds of which were wrecked on the voyage to New-Orleans. Now a powerful tow-boat with a small crew, hardly more than were formerly necessary to man a pair of large coal-boats, brings out of the Ohio to New-Orleans, without stopping, 29,000 tons of coal carried in acres of barges. This would require on any railroad of ordinary grades fully 3,000 cars and 100 powerful locomotives, manned by 600 hands. This would make about two loads for the Great Eastern, or would load twenty large sailing-ships.

The grain trade has been making rapid progress toward cheap transportation by barges, though it has not been sufficiently extensive for the Lower Mississippi to develop anything like the astounding improvement witnessed in the coal trade. The relaxation of the monetary pinch is exciting a new interest in this direction, and new experiments are proposed and will be tried. The single iron barge on the Shannock plan will doubtless be soon put into practice and tested by Mr. Charles G. Johnson, of New-Orleans, who is prepared to build the vessels here. A barge of this kind, built entirely of iron, bulkheaded through and through fore and aft and athwart ship, driven by twin propellers, will have practically two hulls. Loaded to five feet for the up trip she will have a narrow, Robert E. Lee hull, made for speed, on which she will carry 600 tons up stream at a great speed, with upper hull projecting over the sides, like the guards of a common steamboat and above water. On the down trip the boat or barge would be loaded to nine or ten feet, which would bring her upper hull four or five feet below the surface, and would thus double her breadth and enable her to carry fifteen hundred to two thousand tons down stream. Both hulls being well modeled, she could make good speed down as well as up. All the machinery would be at the stern, and the fires would thus be at the rear of the boat instead of the bow, as now in other boats. Such boats would almost supersede the necessity of that intolerable burden to river commerce—insurance. Being wholly of iron, and well provided with pumps, they would hardly be damaged by fire, which could only originate in the freight; being cut up into several bulkhead sections, they would not sink even if snagged.

An iron barge built and arranged on this plan could make to St. Louis and back to New-Orleans two round trips the month, and could carry down stream at one load 75,000 bushels of grain. This would require more than two hundred cars and eight locomotives to transport it. One of these boats could be built at about the cost of two common locomotives, and would last five times as long. The finest iron steamer ever made was built in 1836, and is still running on the St. Lawrence.

This plan is designed to make each barge independent, but the regular system is to have large barges, as now, without any propelling machinery, in order that they may be taken in tow, as coal-barges are. The Mississippi Valley Transportation Company is testing this plan and steadily improving upon it. Their barges are a great success in cheap grain transportation. There is still another scheme which is proposed and will probably soon be put into use by its energetic projectors. It is intended to have large and small barges to be towed in fleets by powerful tow-boats, with tenders or tugs, stationed at points above the water-courses, to haul out and in the barges at different points, as they may be needed. The main propeller will proceed, for instance, from New-Orleans, with barges in tow loaded for Natchez, Vicksburg, Milliken's Bend, Rodney, Napoleon, Helena, Memphis, or any landings where freight may be acquired. On approaching these points, if there be no barge stationed there, the accompanying tender will cut out the proper barge and leave it, while the tow will proceed without stopping. Empty barges, or those loaded, perhaps, will be hauled out and run up to the fleet and made fast to it. Empty barges will be left in any neighborhood where they may be wanted even by planters.

On the return trip the same process will be continued; empty barges will be moved from point to point, and loaded barges taken into the tow and brought down. It is calculated that this system will be far cheaper and more expeditious than any other system of way transportation. Planters and merchants or agents at important points will do all the loading and unloading, as is done on many railroads. The tugs and tenders will cost but little, and will prevent any delay or stoppage on the part of the moving tow.

New-Orleans is the place of all others interested in these movements. Cheap transportation is the only means she can have with which to contend against the present low freights of the East and West railroads which have cut off her up-river trade.

IN CAMP WITH CIRCASSIANS.

Mr. McGahn writes from the interior of Bulgaria to The London News as follows: "The proprietor of the present house prepared us some chickens in a sort of ragout, with various vegetables, which was very nice; and we were all soon gathered round a huge earthen basin in which the dinner had been cooked, helping ourselves to its contents with jack-knives and wooden spoons. This low, dark room, with the fire in the middle of the floor, throwing an uncertain light over the low, heavy, smoky beams of the ceiling, and up the huge dark gulf of the chimney, and over the tall sheepskin caps and glittering arms of these Circassians crouched around, eating their soup and smoking thin cigarettes, looked more like a robbers' cave in some deep cleft of the rocks than a Christian dwelling. These Circassians are all fine-looking men, tall, slender, but broad-shouldered, wiry, and active. They all but one were fresh from the mountains of Sughestan, and still wore the national costume—the long-skirted, close-fitting coat, reaching almost to the feet, with a row of cartridges across the breast by way of decoration, and the tall sheep-skin cap. Their leader, likewise a Circassian, had, however, been in Constantinople for some years, and had adopted the Turkish costume, which set off his tall, slender form to great advantage. It is made of unbleached linen trimmed with red, the trousers broad and loose to the knees, where they suddenly contract and fit tightly around the calves and ankles, and then expanding slightly over the foot, where they meet a pair of low high-heeled shoes of the neatest European pattern. A short jacket of the same material as the trousers, beautifully embroidered in red, a broad red scarf wound many times around the waist, and a yellow turban worn around a fez completed the costume. It shows the careful work of a woman's hand, and this man has evidently one wife at least who is very skillful with the needle. They are on their way to Nisch to be on hand for the expected pillage of Alexinatz, and very pleasant traveling companions they are. They have shown no disposition as yet to pillage me, although I am all alone among them, without the protecting wing of the American eagle, in the person of Mr. Schuyler."

STEALING A SWAN.

At the Northamptonshire Quarter Sessions recently Thomas Wykes was charged with stealing a swan, the property of Edward Orland. The swan, which was the subject of the charge, had been presented to the prosecutor, a miller, by his landlord, Capt. Stirling, and was kept on the mill-stream at Holdenby which flows into the Wen. The prisoner, who was mowing with two other men in a field by the side of the stream, killed the swan with his scythe, and took it home with him, where he and his wife tried to eat it, but found the bird too tough. A search was made, and the bones were found in the prisoner's house, and the skin in an osier-bed close by. Mr. Merewether, for the prisoner, objected that a swan which was swimming about on a public river was not the subject of larceny. For the prosecution it was contended that that could not refer to a bird which was branded in the web of the foot, as in this case. Earl Spencer, in overruling the objection, remarked that this stream could hardly be called a public river, although it did run into the Wen. The prisoner was convicted, and, in consideration of his previous good character, sentenced to a fortnight's imprisonment.

FISHING FOR RATS.

Recently several lads were seen to enter the main sewer on the left bank of the Seine at Paris, by one of the barred outlets to the river. A policeman, curious to know what they were about to do, followed them, and found them seated by the edge of the turbid current fishing for rats with a strong line and hook, the latter baited with a morsel of bacon partially fried. When taken to the Commissary of Police they explained that they sold the skins of water rats at from twenty to thirty cents each, according to size, for manufacturing into "kid" gloves for ladies. One of them, who was not fishing, when questioned as to his means of earning a livelihood, stated that he was "un flot," (a wave,) that is to say, in the evening, at one of the theatres, he passed back and forward beneath canvas painted in shades of blue, to imitate the motion of waves at sea; but the official detained him for vagabondage, considering the calling in question too vague to give a living.

ACCIDENT TO MR. CARPENTER.

A telegram from Milwaukee, Wis., 6th inst., says: "Hon. Matt H. Carpenter met with a serious accident to-day while stepping into a carriage to go to Racine to fill an engagement to speak. He slipped on the snow and fell backward, the back of his head striking on a sharp curb. An artery was ruptured by the concussion. He is still bleeding, but is not considered dangerous."

SPANISH CONSPIRATORS.

THE LAST PLOT AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

SECRET EMISSARIES BETWEEN PARIS AND SPAIN—A WOMAN LETTER-CARRIER ARRESTED—THE PLOT DISCOVERED—DISTINGUISHED MILITARY OFFICERS IMPLICATED.

The Madrid correspondent of the London Standard writes under date of Oct. 26 as follows: "A few weeks ago the Spanish Embassy in Paris detected signs of renewed activity around Ruiz Zorilla and his group of exiles. The political Police of the Spanish Government was for weeks on the trail of the secret emissaries moving between Paris and the frontier, and even on the heels of others going into Spain. Now and then a document or a letter of the Republicans went astray and found its way into the Home Office of the Puerta del Sol. In order to prevent the agents of Zorilla from suspecting anything, the Government had instructed the authorities to abstain from any act of severity, until all the threads of the affair should be in the power of the Cabinet. When the present month began, the Marquis of Molins, Minister Plenipotentiary of his Catholic Majesty in Paris, reported increasing activity in the movements of the Reformista Republic, as styled in the Salmeron-Zorrilla manifesto. At the same time the Madrid Government was most actively served by the Consul in Bayonne. This gentleman, with whom I am personally acquainted, had been a most valuable public servant during and after the civil war, and he closely watched the doings of the Zorillists near the frontier. A strict inspection was ordered at the frontier, as persons were passing to and fro whose business was not contraband alone. Thus it was that by mere chance an officer near one of the posts near Irun had his attention called to a Basque peasant who had continually been traveling between Hendaye and Irun. The last time this woman entered Spain, on the 21st, she was arrested despite her loud and repeated protests. On being searched she was found to be the bearer of a large parcel of letters directed to persons connected with the Reformista Party and to well-known agents of Zorilla in Spain. She was severely cross-questioned, and she came out with a long tale about her innocence, and her only having received these papers from a lady in Hendaye. She added that she was to have, 'as on former occasions,' posted these letters in the mail train leaving Irun at 3 in the afternoon. The civil and military authorities did not let their captive escape, and they would fain have prevented the affair from being noised abroad; but it inkled out, and hence the escape of some of the persons implicated. The Government was informed by telegrams to the Home Office and to the War Office. The papers were sent down to Madrid to be deciphered, as many of them were written in cipher. The chief employes of the mail on the Northern line were at once arrested, and the whole staff of the authorities put on the alert. When the news arrived in Madrid, at first little importance was attached to the matter until the letters and documents arrived. Then it appears that a Cabinet Council was summoned late in the evening, and a decision had to be taken before the parties interested might have time to be warned from over the frontier by their friends. Few people in Madrid imagined what was going on in official circles, and nothing during the evening could have ruffled the equanimity of the Reformistas and their friends. In fact, several of them were seen in the evening in the clubs, at the Royal Opera, and in the cafés. His Majesty, King Alfonso, moved about all the afternoon, and went to the theatre with his royal cousins, the Dukes of Montpensier and their family. In the meanwhile Señor Canovas del Castille was taking cognisance of the seizure, and he decided that the time had come for decisive action. He discovered that the documents were appointments made by Señor Zorilla to high commands in civil and military posts for the event of a successful pronunciamento. He also found himself in presence of the full and complete instructions given by the chief of the Reformist as to his agents and representatives in several provinces. If we are to put faith in the details given by the Ministerial press and by the friends of the Government, the plan of the conspiracy was to make a series of disturbances in the provinces before the end of October. In every district where they hoped to succeed there was to be named an officer of rank to induce the army to co-operate in their efforts for the overthrow of the dynasty. Señor Ruiz Zorilla seems to have used very freely in his instructions the names of men who held military commands in the days of Amadeus and Castelar. It remains to be seen whether these officers had consented to their names being bandied about in this manner, and I must confess that I can hardly bring myself to believe that several even of the Generals arrested can ever have intended to become the tools of Salmeron and Zorilla. However, the Government obtained such proofs of the fast approaching attempt to disturb the peace that its friends assure us that the whole Cabinet decided upon an energetic policy. The Conservatives and Alfonsists say that the outbreak was to have taken place before the date fixed for the opening of the Parliament, and it seems only now too evident that Señor Ruiz Zorilla had obtained support from different parties, and even from ex-Ministers, ex-Generals, and statesmen of the Revolution. There is but little doubt that had the Republicans succeeded, many who now protest that they consider this affair as an act of folly and a chimera would have willingly supported the Reformista bubble if the bubble had taken the shape of a reality in Madrid.

Governors and generals were put on their guard, and ordered to maintain tranquillity with unflinching severity. The frontiers and ports were also placed under rigorous 'surveillance,' whilst the orders of arrest were dispatched in every direction to the number of over 200 in the first twenty-four hours. The night of Sunday was a busy one in the Home and War Office, and Señor Canovas del Castillo hardly retired before 6 in the morning, when the Captain General of Madrid, Primo de Rivera, and Señor Romero Robledo, came to report that almost all the suspected persons were in safe custody. When gay Madrid retired to rest after midnight on Sunday, very few people had the slightest idea of what was going on. From theatres and concerts, as usual, the people thronged into the cafés and clubs at midnight to absorb their constitutional chocolate or ices. In a few clubs there were vague rumors of something, and the more advanced Liberals began to show some uneasiness, but only a few privileged individuals got notice, like Gen. Borgos, in time to scamper off. When the streets of Madrid got quiet the patrols began to appear, and officers of the civil guards, or Police in plain clothes, went forth to their work. When Madrid awoke this morning the news spread like wildfire, and in every direction the most conflicting rumors went abroad. It was difficult at first to ascertain the truth, as, of course, every party or coterie gave the events of the day the color which best suited its own views and opinions. In the midst of such a deluge of on dits and rumors we had to pick our way carefully, and in the afternoon we had sifted the most reliable data. The Minister of Gobernacion undertook to lay hold of the civilians and ex-politicians, who were, before daybreak, safely housed in the Saladero prison. They were a strange crowd of lawyers, journalists, old functionaries, ex-Ministers of State, ex-deputies, and even three or four representatives of the weak sex. The civil Governors of every province did their work swiftly and suddenly, so that by night they were able to report the arrest of the intended rulers of the Reformista Party. In some large towns and in many provinces the authorities are still on the qui vive, as these events have caused in the Republican masses a strange and uneasy surging of passions half asleep. Now our narrative must pass to that most melancholy feature of all Spanish political agitation, the onus of which lays on the shoulders of men who wear an uniform, and who call themselves gentlemen as well as officers. However, when such cases are examined abroad, critics ought to bear in mind that a soldier is not in Spain considered bound to stand aloof from politics, and the Conservatives have to blame none but themselves if the traditions of loyalty are so low in the military annals of the country. Thus it is that among the Generals and Brigadiers arrested we find such men as Acosta, Oreiro, Merelo, Lagunero, Velarde, Patino, Goni, Zorilla, Gonzalez, and last, but not least, the Brigadier Marini, who carried the heights above Guetharia only eight months ago. Colonels, Majors, and Captains are among the lists of arrests made by order of the War Office. It must, however, be noticed that almost all these officers were on the retired or unattached lists, owing to the very unwise and impolitic custom which turns out into beggary or 'cessantio' the men who happen to have been appointed under other governments. Most of the civil and military offenders arrested had been either mentioned or nominated in the Zorilla documents in connection with the coming attempt at a pronunciamento. The greater part of the persons implicated were taken so much by surprise that they seem most of them to have considered that their accomplices had betrayed them. The story of the Basque peasant seized in Hendaye is disbelieved by the Zorillistas, and they, as usual in Spain, accuse one another with treason. As far as I can ascertain, not more than forty-five field officers and Generals have been arrested, with nearly three hundred civilians, but the Government has also seized many important documents, many depots of arms and ammunition, chiefly in the northern provinces of Spain.

The Government was somewhat surprised to see among the very first who hastened to congratulate the Cabinet and to offer their services, the Marshal Serrano. He called at the War Office and he gave repeated assurances of his devotion to the dynasty and to existing institutions. His mansion in the Barrio di Salamanca was most numerously attended during the afternoon, and not a few military men were among the visitors. This conspiracy is now the sole topic of conversation, and no doubt much exaggeration will be indulged in by the gossips of the capital. There is now not the slightest doubt that Senor Canovas del Castillo must have had some forebodings of the coming enterprise when he spoke so earnestly of revolutionary intrigues in my last interview with him ten days ago.

A HUGE HOLE IN HIS HEAD.

The Servian correspondent of the News writes: "I found Hume and Sandwith apparently extracting the contents of a man's head. The poor fellow had been struck in the forehead by a shell splinter, which had smashed in all the osseous substance with the exception of, it appeared, a single plate of bone. From the depth of the wound, from which the skin and flesh hung down over the face, it seemed to me, not being an expert, that, not to try to speak scientifically, the interior of the head had been reached. But Sandwith took out all the bone splinters, sewed the gash up, and bandaged the head, in the lively hope that the man would pull through. And what is passing strange is that with this huge hole in his head, he walked or rode on horseback some four miles back from the place where he was wounded, conversed quite composedly with Villiers, who walked with him part of the way, and sat talking while Sandwith was rummaging about inside his head for pieces of his skull. It could not be said that he, at any rate, was at all suffering from the 'shock,' which is so nearly a universal immediate sequence of gunshot wounds."

THE HORRORS OF MODERN WARFARE.

THE BATTLE OF DJUNIS — A GENUINE SUCCESS BY THE TURKISH ARMY—3,000 SERVIANS DESERTED—HOW THE WOUNDED PRISONERS WERE TREATED.

A correspondent of the London Telegraph writes: "Thus they came on, and presently opened so fearful a rifle fire that the bullets fell around us all like hail. As yet our infantry were quiet; not a rifle was heard, and the foe was coming nearer to the semi-circular trenches of which I have before spoken. Suddenly there is a movement in the bushes, a sharp note from the bugle, a rattle of bayonets and steel barrels, and then a little cheer. Our men are moving, the supports are taking the empty trenches, and the rest of each battalion is in the reserve lines. All at once such a fire pours forth as envelops you in smoke, and makes that still advancing column stagger. Yet only for a minute; there is a counter-cheer and a rapid rush. Whirr! how the bullets fly past them; with what shrieks do the shells bound in! See, the Servians are standing still for a moment, firing yet, but coming no nearer to the mountain. Their line is gradually being fed, too, and they are extending every moment. It is only the fear of the shells and the bullets which makes them hesitate. Perhaps not only the fear, but rather the effect, for now they are falling fast, and without the aid even of a glass we can see that they are strewing the ground by hundreds or staggering away to die. Harder than ever is our fire, as theirs weakens, and more determined, too, are our men, for they now quit the outpost trenches and are advancing upon the bewildered enemy. Volley after volley from the foe fails to stop them; they leave many a comrade on the ground, but on they go, till at length the Servians, seeing their red fezes coming nearer and nearer, turn and fly, deserting 3,000 of their number, who will never see home in Russia or on the banks of the Danube any more. * * * Not one was there but might have been the hardy father of a numerous family. I did not see a boy among them. One in particular I noticed—and he was but a type of the rest—a tall, well-made, broad-shouldered warrior, who, having fought to his uttermost and received a wound in the stomach, had lain down upon the road to Derbent in hope of succor. Unhappily for him, friends were far away, and his comrades had hung in fantastic fashion, on a tree hard by, a Circassian who, having fallen into their hands, had been first tortured and put to death. I was looking at him as I rode by, wondering if he were yet alive, when, horrible to relate, there came upon the scene four Circassians. They, too, had seen their hanging comrade, and they thirsted for blood. At this moment the wounded Serb raised his head and rolled his glassy eyes round in hope of descrying help. Down sprang a Circassian, and with a little dagger pierced the dying man through and through, cut off his right hand, and ripped him up as he lay upon the ground. Fortunately his end was near, and he expired; but even in death he was a handsome giant, this victim to the barbarous war which Russia has caused and waged."

END OF A DROUGHT IN LOUISIANA.

The New-Orleans Times of the 4th inst. says: "After one of the most extended droughts ever known in this section of the country—reaching over a period of eighty-five days, from August 9 to November 2—shortly after midnight of Wednesday, the welcome rain descended to the thirsty earth in copious and refreshing showers. The performance opened at 1 o'clock in brisk style, although ten minutes before that hour the heavens were clear and starlit, and gave no more promising evidence of rain than has been seen there for nearly three months. For a half an hour the rain continued its vigorous and beneficent service, and then easing off, there was a lull until nearly 3 o'clock, when, with a rise in the wind, the rain came up again, and for more than half an hour the floods fell and the winds blew with a savage ferocity that seemed to indicate a purpose to make up for lost time. Suffice it to say that the dry spell has ended at last, and that thousands who have long suffered for want of water are now happy. The total rainfall was one inch and three-tenths—evidence that while the deluge lasted it was one of the most violent on record. The drought just ended was almost unexampled in its duration. The dry spell of 1874, occurring at about the same time of the year, lasted seventy-one days—or fourteen days less than the duration of that of 1876."

THE HORSE PLAGUE IN EGYPT.

A correspondent of the London Times writes from Cairo: "The horse plague seems to be losing its virulence with the approach of cooler weather. A tropical storm of singular violence broke over the country with floods of rain a week ago, and seems to have cleared the air. Though a few cases occurred at Alexandria, they have not been followed by others, and we hope the city will escape. Cairo has suffered terribly. The death of 1,800 Army horses and 2,700 belonging to private persons was reported up to the 1st of October. Horses of price, well kept and well fed, were most attacked, and succumbed most easily. It is described as a kind of typhus, and death, after great apparent pain, ensues in a few hours. The disease crept down the river, clinging curiously to the right bank, and was so destructive in many districts that bullocks are alone in use from the total destruction of the horses. The Government is now fully alive to the danger. Stringent regulations have been issued as regards isolation of the infected animals and their burial. But the regulations somewhat defeat their object by the imposition of a fine of a dollar on each infected horse—a rule which leads their owners to conceal the death."

ANCIENT INDIAN VILLAGE IN UTAH.

The Pioche Record says: "Parties in from that region report the existence of an ancient Indian village at Paragoonah, Utah, distant about two hundred miles from here. The houses, now covered with trees and brush, were arranged in uniform rows, and were about 8 by 9 feet. They were all two-story, built of adobe, the lower one neatly paved and the upper one supported by pillars of sand-stone rock. The only entrance discoverable was a sort of man-hole in the top. Bone needles, rude appliances for grinding corn, and other relics were found in several of the houses. There is a tradition among the Indians of that region that long years ago the tribe that inhabited those houses were almost exterminated in a fierce fight with the Navajoes, that the remainder of the tribe fled to the other side of the Colorado, and there built them habitations in the mountains where the Navajoes could not reach them, and now live there secluded. Our informant says the structure and arrangement of the houses give evidence of a rude civilization on the part of the builders that no longer exists among the aboriginals now living in that section."

FAST RAILWAY TRAVELING.

The Engineer gives an account of "the highest authentic instances of high railway speeds" on record. Brunel, with the Courier class of locomotive, ran thirteen miles in ten minutes, equal to seventy-eight miles an hour. Mr. P. Stirling, of the Great Northern, took, two years back, sixteen carriages fifteen miles in thirteen minutes, equal to seventy-five miles an hour. The "Great Britain," "Lord of the Isles," and "Iron Duke," broad-gauge engines on the Great Western Railway, have each run with four or five carriages from Paddington to Didcot in forty-seven and a half minutes, equal to sixty-six miles an hour. The new Midland coupled express engines, running in the usual course, have been timed sixty-eight, seventy, and seventy-two miles an hour. The 10 A. M. express on the Great Northern from Leeds has been timed, and found mile after mile at the rate of a mile in fifty-two seconds, or at sixty-nine and two-tenths miles an hour. The engines used are Mr. Stirling's outside cylinder bogie express engines, the load being ten carriages.

GEN. BUTLER'S PROMISES.

Gens. Banks and Butler spoke at a Republican meeting in Faneuil Hall, Boston, Tuesday evening. Gen. Butler, in concluding, said: "I desire to say a word to you on the future of the Republican Party, whether in disaster or in success; and I have cause to believe that we have had success in the nation, in the general result, although again I say, I have not had the returns. I believe without doubt that we have success; but whether in success or defeat, let me say to you, fellow-citizens, that, so far as in me lies, the banner of Massachusetts, unfurled always in behalf of liberty, of equal rights to all men, [applause;] in behalf of equality of power to all men under the Government; in behalf of equal protection to all men on every foot of American soil—shall be kept in advance. [applause;] and Massachusetts ideas and Massachusetts principles shall find a defender in me to the extent of my ability, not only here, but on the floor of Congress, where I am sent to a new sphere of duty."

SEIZURE OF POISONED CURRANTS.

A seizure has been made of a large quantity of currants, of the value of between £7,000 and £8,000, which had been brought to Bristol, England, by a steamer from Patras. It appears that the vessel brought, in addition to the fruit and other produce, a quantity of lead ore, which was stored in the ship's hold with the currants, and, in the rolling of the vessel at sea, some of the ore, in which arsenic and antimony are found, had entered into the cases of currants. The Customs authorities, discovering this, communicated with the port medical authorities, and their officer immediately seized the whole of the fruit, and afterward made a declaration before the justices, who approved the step he had taken.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

MORLEY'S LIBRARY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

SHORTER ENGLISH POEMS. Selected, edited, and arranged by HENRY MORLEY. London and New-York: CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN & Co.

If the accomplished Robert Chambers, the father of literary encyclopedias could revisit "the glimpses of the moon," and in these days see of the development of his great idea, he would assuredly be comforted. When but a young man, struggling with adversity, he was ambitious to shine as a reviver of the almost lost traditions of obscure places, quaint folk lore, rhymes of places, nursery rhymes and superstitions, and he was stimulated by the efforts of the men—the Percys, Herds, Scotts, Motherwells, and Buchans—who had snatched from the almost spent breath of tradition the glorious old ballads which will live forever. When success crowned his efforts, and prosperity rewarded his industry, Robert Chambers projected the Encyclopedia of English Literature, which bears his name. This was the first attempt ever made to treat this subject on an exhaustive and comprehensive scale, and despite its many shortcomings, and not a few blunders, it still holds a high place among this class of books. Some twenty or twenty-five years ago, a capital series of cheap paper-cover books were published by Charles Knight, under the title of Half Hours with the Best Authors. This work did not profess, as did Chambers', to treat the subject in chronological order, and it partook more of the character of a work of "elegant extracts" from the various authors. During the last twenty years there have been published innumerable "hand-books," "text-books," and "histories" of English literature, but if the subsequent volumes of the series under review come up to the standard of the present, Mr. Morley's "Library of English Literature" is destined to supersede them all. Of course, to that large and rapidly increasing class of readers who may be termed "old book collectors," such a work has no charm where original editions are scarce. They depend for the reproduction of their favorite authors, in style as closely resembling the originals as possible, with the most scrupulous fidelity in the reprinting of the letter-press, even to the printer's blunders, upon the labors of the many admirable literary societies, which have sprung up since the foundation of the famous Roxburghe Society. The individual efforts of enterprising firms have also stimulated a desire for new and perfect editions of old English classics. The dramatic student, for example, who wishes to familiarize himself with the ante-Shakespearean drama, the morality and miracle plays, and the crude, vulgar comedies of the "Royster Doister" type, can have recourse to the new "Dodsley Collection" recently edited by Carew Hazlitt, in fifteen volumes. The student of obscure contemporary Shakespearean literature will find nearly all he desires in The Old Book Collector's Miscellany, published by Reeves & Turner, in London; while a whole library of rare and valuable "reprints" of immortal but obscure works, from More's Utopia to Buckingham's Rehearsal are embraced in the splendid series of works edited by Arber, one of the most accomplished of living scholars. We need not refer to the many editions of the great works of Shakespeare, Jonson, Marlowe, Spenser, Beaumont and Fletcher, Chapman, Webster, Massinger, and others. These are within the reach of most people. The real value of such a publication as the one before us is its comprehensive and exhaustive character. There are probably not half a dozen men living who could have been more safely intrusted with such a task than the learned Professor of English Literature in the London University. If in his treatment of the very earliest poetic effusions produced in England he has not been, for the tastes of some, sufficiently elaborate, let them consult the three magnificent volumes by Skeat, treating of English literature from the earliest times to the end of the thirteenth century, from 1298 till 1393, and from 1394 till 1579; and if these do not suffice, an edition of Morris' work on English literature from 1250 to 1400, a book which is enriched with one of the best glossaries in the language. Mr. Morley's treatment of the subject is novel, and in our opinion disadvantageous, to the reader. He has planned the work as follows:

Volume First—A series selected from all the best and most characteristic of those poems which are short enough to be given in full.
Second—Corresponding series of the best of prose works.
Third—A series of pieces in prose and verse, illustrating from first to last the religious life in England.
Fourth—A series of plays by the best dramatists from the time of the miracle-plays "downward."

When we consider that the plays published in the Dodsley collection which were written before the Shakespearean era would fill three or four volumes as large as the one before us, (and "Dodsley" does not include all,) the work of selection will be difficult indeed. We do not think the author has done wisely in making two volumes of poetic selections. If it were absolutely necessary to devote two volumes to the subject of poetry, no distinction should have been made between short and long poems. We shall endeavor to illustrate the defects of such an arrangement by references to the volume before us. The specimen poem by King James I. of Scotland, printed, is "Peebles of the Play," a humorous piece, of very doubtful parentage, although such acute authorities as Tytler and Maitland have pronounced it genuine. Now, the great and lovely poem, about which there can be no question as to authenticity, "The King's Quair," is not given—not even an extract—because it will come under the category of the "long" poems, and be treated in another volume. Again, the short poems from Spenser's works presented in this volume are the Eclogue, Thomalin, and Morrell, from the Shepherds Calendar and a few others. The poetic merits of this eclogue are, comparatively speaking, of the most meagre kind, and it seems to have been selected because of its very pointed allusions to certain offensive ecclesiastical dignitaries. Macauley's sweeping allusion to the (almost) impossibility of any one getting as far through the "Faerie Queene," as the death of "The Blatant Beast," has doubtless prevented many from even "looking into" that joyous poem, and any young reader who for the first time made the acquaintance of Spenser through this extract will not be disposed to pine for the appearance of the second volume containing the "long" extracts. Happily, there are here to be found, also, such poems as "The Epithalamium," the noblest ode to marriage in the English language. The selections made from the lovely sonnets are very fine, and it is a pity the reader could not at the same time be treated to some of the gems of "The Faerie Queene." The extract from Marlowe given is his well-known "Passionate Shepherd," beginning,

"Come live with me and be my love."

We presume that the same author's splendid poem of "Hero and Leander" will appear in the next volume, but if the part which Chapman tacked on to Marlowe's poem be omitted, as it ought, there is no reason why it should not have appeared among the "short" poems in this volume. To appreciate the fiery, glowing, poetic genius of Marlowe, however, the reader must have recourse to his great dramas, notably "The Tragedy of Dr. Faustus." The sweet lyrics from Shakespeare are very judiciously selected, and when we read them detached from their proper places in the great dramas, one cannot but be struck with the impression that had his dramatic genius not "overwhelmed," as it were, these lovely gems, Shakespeare would have ranked as one of the greatest lyric poets from Pindar to Burns. We have not left ourselves space to dwell further on the merits of this book. We may remark that Mr. Morley's illustrative notes and introductory remarks are valuable, and the book is very handsomely "got up" and charmingly illustrated.

LIFE OF JOHN LOCKE. By FOX BOURNE. HENRY KING. London:

Those who have been wont to look upon John Locke merely in the light of a dry philosopher, will be agreeably surprised when they read these pages, and find that he was a man of warm heart and generous sympathies. His life was during a singularly eventful period, for he was a boy of seventeen at Westminster school when King Charles had his head cut off at Whitehall, and yet lived through two and a half years of the reign of that monarch's grand-daughter Anne. His grand-father was connected with the cloth trade, then the staple of the West of England, and his father was a Somersetshire attorney. John seems to have owed his Westminster education to the extremely disturbed condition of Bristol during the civil wars; a circumstance which stood in the way of his attending school there. He went to Westminster in 1646, the famous Dr. Busby, who ruled the school from 1638 to 1695, being master, and a pretty hard time he seems to have had of it.

The boys attended prayer at 6, after which the school work begun. Two hours were spent in Greek and Latin grammar repetitions, in extempore Latin paraphrases and exposition, by the elder scholars; by the younger of passages they had learned over night under the correction and instruction of their masters. An hour was then allowed them in which to prepare other exercises, and between 9 and 11 they were examined in prose and verse composition, still in Greek and Latin, were called upon to translate viva voce passages from English authors into Latin or Greek, and listened to their masters' exposition of classical authors, on which they were to be examined in the afternoon. Two hours were to be devoted to dinner and such pastime—by way of dessert—as the reading of Latin manuscripts, in order that they might be familiar with mediæval handwriting. Between 1 and 3 they were examined in the passages previously expounded to them, and exercised in construing and other grammatical ways, examining all the rhetorical figures, and translating out of verse into prose or out of prose into verse; out of Greek into Latin or out of Latin into Greek.

Between 3 and 4 they were allowed to walk about in the recreation ground; and after that till supper time they were chiefly employed in translating Greek or Latin prose into English prose, or French or Latin verse into English verse, and in preparing their exercises for the morrow. So four days of the week are filled. Fridays were set apart for repetitions, and Saturdays for French and Latin declamations. In the upper forms part of the time was devoted to the study of Hebrew and Arabic, instead of the classical languages, and during Summer a little elementary geography was taught after supper."

And what was the fruit of this awful and wonderful cramming, which would have amazed Paul Dombey's "forcer," Dr. Blimber, himself? According to Locke, who may be presumed to have profited exceptionally by the training, it was in most cases very poor. His writings amply attest this. "A good part of the training now in fashion in the schools of Europe," he wrote, "and that goes ordinarily into the round of education, a gentleman may in good measure be unfurnished with, without any great disparagement to himself or prejudice to his affairs." From Westminster he went to Christ Church as a "student," that is, scholar with allowances, and after going through the regular academic course, commenced the study of medicine, a science which he would have made entirely his profession had health permitted.

In 1665 he accompanied Sir Walter Vane on a diplomatic mission to the Elector of Brandenburg, of which he gives some curious particulars, and of a German Court of that date; and in the following year he became acquainted with Lord Shaftesbury, who had a great influence on his career. This nobleman, the Lord Ashley of Charles II.'s famous "Cabal" Ministry, had fallen into ill health. Chance brought Locke to his notice, and he soon conceived so great a regard for him as to beg him to make his house his home. There Locke became, ere long, almost entirely resident, as guide, philosopher, friend, tutor, doctor, and adviser-general to the family, both in town and country, and a successful operation on his patron in 1668 naturally caused him to rise still higher in his favor. His skill as a match-maker was soon afterward called into request. Lord Shaftesbury's eldest son was a poor creature, both in mind and body, but his father was very anxious that he should marry and have an heir. Strange to say, it fell to Locke to find a young lady, which he did in the person of Lady Dorothy Manvers, daughter of the Earl of Rutland, and to manage the whole of the delicate business, which he appears to have done to the satisfaction of all parties. The son—whom Locke assisted into the world—of this young couple was the author of the famous "Characteristics."

In 1670, Locke became greatly interested in the scheme for planting Carolina, which, granted by Charles II. to several Lords Proprietors, of whom Lord Shaftesbury was the most active and influential, whence it happened that Locke became a sort of managing Secretary of the patentees. It is chiefly to Locke's influence, Dr. Bourne thinks, that no other colony, English or foreign, was ever started with such guarantees for "liberty of conscience." Locke's connection with the colony lasted only during its earliest infancy.

In 1675 Locke, now forty-three, started on a tour in France, and his accounts of this trip form a very entertaining picture of the period. Here is a sketch of a French country inn:

"We were no sooner got into our chambers but we thought we were come there too soon, as the highway seemed the cleaner and more desirable place. It being decreed we must stay there all night, I called, entreated, and swaggered a good while for a pair of slippers. At last they brought them, and I sat me down on the only seat we had in our apartment, which at present was a form, but had formerly been a wooden horse. I thought to ease myself by standing; but with no very good success, I assure you, for the soles of my pantofles being of sturdy timber, had very little compliance for my feet, and so made it somewhat uncomfortable to keep myself, as the French call it, on one end. This small taste of sabots gave me a surfeit of them, and I should not make choice of a country to pass my pilgrimage in where they are in fashion. When supper came we sought to divert our pain, but we quickly found a supper of ill meat and worse cooking. Soup and ragout and such other viands of good savor lost here their relish quite, and out of five or six dishes we patched up a very uncomfortable supper. But be it as rascally as it was, it must not fail to be fashionable. We had the ceremony of first and second courses and a dessert at the close. Whatever the fare the treat must be in all its formality, with some hawe, if no better, under the name of pommes de paradise."

Next evening, at Tilliard, they were more fortunate, and afterward, while touring in the South, he chronicles the having "a dish of green peas with gravy, the best thing I ever ate."

He gives a frightful picture of the poverty of the country, so frightfully taxed to pay for the whims and wars of the Grand Monarque. Of a district near Bordeaux he writes:

"Their ordinary food is dry bread and water. Fish seldom enters their pots. They can make no distinction between flesh and fasting days. In several other parts the peasants are much more miserable."

In February, 1676 Lord Shaftesbury was sent to the Tower for disputing the legal existence of Parliament after it had been prorogued seven months. He had been dismissed from the Chancellership two years before Locke went to France, and had become more and more alienated from Charles II. When Locke returned, in April, 1679, he at once repaired to him in Aldersgate street. The house may yet be seen, and its "pilasters and wreaths the "graceful work of Inigo Jones," are commemorated by Lord Macaulay.

In 1683, finding himself an object of suspicion on account of his intimacy with Shattesbury, who died in Holland that year, Locke quitted England, and in November, 1684, the Dean of Christ Church received the King's commands, through Lord Sunderland, to "have him removed from being a student." His later life was chiefly spent at Oates, in Essex, the seat of his friends, Sir Francis and Lady Masham; for he evidently was one of that happy sort of bachelors whose friends are so fond of them as to become a considerable compensation for celibacy. Sir Francis Masham was a man of considerable estate and position, and father, by his first wife, of the husband of Queen Anne's favorite. His second wife, Locke's friend, was Damaris, daughter of Dr. Cudworth, a distinguished Cambridge man. This lady was clearly a person of extraordinary intellectual power, yet seems at the same time to have been as tender-hearted, affectionate, and feminine as Amelia Sedley. It was no wonder that under such circumstances the philosopher should have consented to have made his home in her establishment. It would seem that Sir Francis and Lady Masham lived entirely apart from the life of Lord Masham and his intriguing wife, Abigail Hill, for we read nothing of them in these pages. No doubt their "set" would have cared as little for the Oates "set" as the Oates set for them. It was at Oates that Locke died, in 1704, tenderly cared for and deeply regretted by Lady Masham, and in the Church of High Laver, near by, he lies buried. The mansion-house of Oates was razed to the ground early in this century.

Locke may be said to be represented to-day by Lord Lovelace, Byron's son-in-law, since that nobleman is the direct descendant of Lord Chancellor King, who was the son of Locke's cousin, an Exeter grocer. Locke took a fancy to the boy, helped him to an education, and assisted him with money, and the fruit of it was his rising to the woolsack. Mr. Locke-King, Lord Lovelace's brother, is to-day a prominent Liberal member of Parliament. Mr. Bourne has performed his task of biographer very industriously, yet might have made a far more compact and interesting work of it. One of these huge volumes would have been quite enough, had wise selection and clever condensation been exercised.

THE RIME OF THE ANCIENT MARINER. By Samuel Taylor Coleridge. Illustrated by Gustave Doré. New York: Harper & Brothers.

There is such a subtle sympathy between the genius of Coleridge and that of Doré, that one looks expectantly and eagerly into this superb folio. The weird and dreamy fancies of the poet ought, one would suppose, to kindle the fire of the artist. The expectation is amply fulfilled. The mystery and phantasy, sometimes encroaching on the horrible, which distinguish this wonderful poem, are fitly interpreted by the hand of the master. It is evident that the artist has thrown himself without reserve into the spirit of the poem. The result is what may perhaps be called one of the most remarkable series of drawings which have ever come from his pencil. Doré's illustrations to Don Quixote and to the Wandering Jew are usually reckoned as his very best. But one or two in this edition of the Ancient Mariner are of surpassing power. As a whole, the series is far beyond those which appear in the Doré editions of two of Tennyson's Idyls of the King, and only in his illustrations to the Inferno is there anything approaching the vigor and grace exhibited here. Of the more fantastic pictures, the most striking is that which illustrates the couplet—

"Nine fathom deep he had followed us
From the land of mist and snow."

The glimpses given of the bed of the ocean, strewn with wrecks, corpses of the drowned, and slimy, creeping things, are horribly suggestive, though the artist has made these shapes merely vague outlines in the depths of the sea. A more agreeable picture, and one less in the usual "Doré manner," is that which accompanies the lines describing the assembling of the wedding guests, whose "loud uproar bursts from the door." Another, giving the effect of falling rain, is a marvelous piece of work, in which the subject is treated with rare delicacy. Doré, in these latest productions, has resorted more frequently than usual to the expedient of using a high horizon line. In this way a vaster expanse is secured, and a wonderful perspective is contrived for the eye. The Japanese have shown themselves masters of this trick of art, as their pictures of island-dotted bays and crowded market-places attest. A remarkable instance of the skillful use of a high horizon may be noted in Doré's illustration to the line, "The moving moon went up the sky." Here the sky is scarcely shown, but the picture is filled with an image of the far-reaching sea, on whose serpent-like waves the moon gleams ghastly white. This, like most of Doré's drawings, gives one the impression that the artist has used a black surface, on which he has wiped out the half lights and dashed in the high lights with a white pencil. But some of the more agreeable subjects are treated in the manner of an etching, and present a broad and sunny effect which is novel and successful.

There are thirty-nine full-page engravings, the pages being rather larger than those in the Doré edition of Elaine, which book the Ancient Mariner generally resembles in style. There are three delightful vignettes from the same pencil. The engravers are Pisan, Deschamps, Bellenger, and other famous Frenchmen, whose work is familiar to a world of lovers of art. The poem occupies the opening pages of the book, and lines are repeated under the illustrations. It is difficult to conceive of a more sumptuous example of the book-making art than this.

A COURSE OF PRACTICAL INSTRUCTION IN ELEMENTARY BIOLOGY. By F. H. Huxley, LL.D., Sec. R. S. Assisted by T. N. Martin, B. A., M. B., D. Sc., Professor of Biology in Johns Hopkins University, &c. &c. London and New-York: Macmillan & Co. 1876.

That this little work has reached a second edition is proof that its value has been well appreciated—somewhere. We wish it were in more general use in American schools and colleges, and it is with the hope that it may receive increased attention in those institutions that we give it a place here. The part taken by Dr. Martin in its preparation saves it from having been "revised and adapted to the wants of American students," a recommendation too often appended to works of the kind, as though science in America must be different from science anywhere else. Although specially adapted to the laboratory, the earnest student of biology would find it applicable for use at home; indeed, considering the scarcity of physiological laboratories, it will probably be chiefly valuable, for the present, at any rate, in private study. Any one carefully following its instructions will probably attain to a better and more practical understanding of many things essential to be known in botany and zoology, than by the help of any other textbook. The selections of objects for examination have been made among things which are the most common and easily obtainable, and the method of examination, admirably laid down, will convey at once an accurate and, to the ordinary student, very comprehensive knowledge of details of structure in both the animal and the vegetable kingdoms, which, with less explicit instructions, it would be difficult to acquire. It should be accounted a standard text-book for the biological inquirer, and those who will carefully follow it will find it at once simple, accurate, and within its limits thorough. It contains, however, nothing more than every person professing to have a liberal education ought to know.

LITERARY NOTES.

—The second volume of Lord Houghton's Monographs will be a Memoir of Frances, Lady Crewe.

—William M. F. Round, author of Achsah, has in press with D. Lothrop & Co. a Christmas story entitled Torn and Mended. It is said to be original and vivid in conception and style.

—The London Examiner suggests to Mr. Rossiter Johnson, the editor of the "Condensed Classics," that the Scudery Romances, now little read, offer a vast field for condensation.

—"Hesba Stratton," an English lady, whose true name is Miss Hannah Smith, has recently published three short stories of English low life. Their titles are A Night and a Day, Apple Tree Court, and The Worth of a Baby.

—The writings of Theodore Parker are increasing in circulation, and many of the Unitarians, holding him next to Channcey, are earnestly debating whether his works shall be adopted as the exponent of present Unitarianism.

—The new volumes in Macmillan & Co's. "History and Literature Primers," edited by Mr. J. H. Green, are Geography, by Mr. George Grove, Classical Geography by Mr. H. F. Tozer, and Philology by Mr. George Peile.

—A Chicago house is making more or less noise over "the first American translation ever made" of that world-renowned poem, Frithiof's Saga. The poem was printed here in a good translation made in England ten years ago.

—Hurst & Blackett, London, will bring out shortly Historic Châteaux by Alexander Baillie Cochrane, M. P.; Tales of our Great Families by Edward Walford; and My Year in an Indian Fort, by Mrs. Guthrie, author of Through Russia.

—The Princess Leichtenstein, author of Holland House, has in preparation a novel, entitled Nora, taken from the German, but understood as preluding an entirely original work from the same writer. The publishers are to be Messrs. Burns & Oates.

—The editor of the Literary World, a monthly journal, which is rapidly increasing in circulation, is responsible for the opinion that Mice at Play, by "Neil Forest," (Mrs. Floyd, of Staten Island,) is very much superior to Mr. Habberton's Helen's Babies.

—Ten thousand copies of the special report on The Public Libraries of the United States, their history, condition, and management, have been printed and are ready for distribution. The book contains over 1,300 pages, and weighs, in paper covers, five pounds and a quarter.

—The manuscript of the work on Babylonia, which the late Mr. George Smith was preparing for the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, has been left in a complete state, and is now in the printer's hands. Mr. Sayce, an Oxford scholar, has undertaken to see the work through the press. Mr. Hormuzd Rassam will succeed Mr. Smith in his work of exploration in the East, and a firman for two years has been granted to him.

—Ancient Streets and Homesteads in England is the title of a book written by Mr. Alfred Rimmer, to be introduced to the public by a preface from Rev. J. S. Howson, Dean of Chester. It will be uniform with Holland House, and will contain about 150 illustrations by the author, including views of the "Rows of Chester," and pictures of ancient buildings in each English county. Messrs. Macmillan & Co. are the publishers, and intend to have the volume ready before Christmas.

—The Pearl Fountain and other Fairy Tales, by the Kavanagh sisters, with thirty illustrations in the beautiful classic style of J. Moyr Smith, will be their Christmas book. Mr. Holt says that he has been led into this field by finding that if he is to have enough books full of goodness, and free from goodyness to keep his own children supplied, he will have to publish some of them himself. It he can improve this department of literature, his books will have a most hearty welcome.

—The late Bishop Thirlwall was the intellectual giant among the English prelates of his day. His charges were more read and quoted than any other Episcopal documents, and furnish a very fair conspectus of the course of religious thought in England during the last sixty years. These charges, together with his literary remains and letters, are soon to be published in London by Daldy, Isbister & Co., in four volumes, under the editorship of Canon Perowne, and will be a most important and valuable contribution to theological literature. Bishop Thirlwall almost created the modern Broad Church element in England, which has been so active in letters and in social science, and whatever proceeded from his master mind is of permanent value. Another announcement, for which many scholars in this country will feel gratified is that of a Memoir of Alexander Ewing, D. C. L., late Bishop of Argyll, the editor of the "Present Day Papers," to which he was a large contributor, and the author of Revelation Considered as Light, a volume of sermons. He was a close student and bright thinker, and if his memoir is a proper record of his thoughtful life, it will have much religious value and literary interest. Other books soon to be brought out by the same firm are a new work by Rev. A. W. Thorold, Canon of York; Across Africa, by Commander Cameron; the Christians of Turkey, Their Condition Under Mussulman Rule, by Rev. Wm. Denton; a new one-volume edition of the Autobiography and Memoir of Thomas Guthrie, D. D.; a volume of Dr. Guthrie's sermons, The City—Its Sins and Sorrows, and Pleas for Ragged Schools; Lady Verney's Sketches from Nature, in Pen and Pencil, and the second edition, greatly improved, of Prof. James Geikie's Great Ice Age.

FISH CULTURE IN VERMONT.

Gov. Fairbanks has appointed Rev. W. H. Lord the Fish Commissioner of Vermont. During the last eighteen months the State Fish Commissioners have put 6,000 land-locked salmon into the Winooski River at Essex. Fifty thousand salmon have been put into Lewis Creek, Ferrisburg, and 5,000 each in Franklin and Fairfield Ponds, Franklin County. The total distribution of fish from May, 1875, to November, 1876, has been as follows: Twenty pike, 300 Potomac bass, 363 black bass, and 140,000 salmon—distributed in some thirty different places.

A YOUNG TRAPPER.

A young down-easter named Hendrick makes his head-quarters at Rumney, Maine, every Winter season, and sets over three thousand traps for different kinds of animals in Coos and Grafton Counties. It takes him two weeks to make the round of his traps on horseback. He has very good success in his chosen vocation, and last season secured fur to the value of $1,000, including seventeen otters at $28 each. He has already captured $600 worth this season.

ANOTHER VIEW OF IT.

A few days ago, as President Chadbourne, of Williams College, during a lecture, was telling the Freshman Class that the notion of allowing girls to enter the college for the sake of their good influence on the boys was not as sound as it might be, a Freshman raised his hand and eagerly inquired, "Don't you think it would have a good influence on the young ladies?"

LAW REPORTS.

COURT NOTES.

The Grand Jury, which was sworn in on Monday, was charged yesterday by Recorder Hackett in accordance with the requirements of the statute, and retired to inquire into the matters awaiting their consideration.

Mary O'Connor recovered judgment against the City for $17,000 in Supreme Court, Special Term, yesterday, on an award. The title to the property for which the award was made was in dispute, and has been settled in the plaintiff's favor by the result of the action.

Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday denied motions for a reference and to frame issues for trial in the suits brought against the executors of the estate of John L. Brown, deceased, by Oliver W. West and other attorneys, to recover certain fees. The particulars of the actions have been published heretofore in The Times.

In Part I. of the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, Daniel McFail, a peddler, of No. 178 Chrystie street, who, on the night of the 14th October, attacked John H. Deyo, of No. 63 South Fifth avenue, and violently robbed him of $3, was placed on trial before Recorder Hackett, and convicted of assault with intent to rob. He was sentenced to three years in State Prison.

Judge Lawrence, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, heard argument and reserved his decision on motions to vacate two orders of arrest against Hardy Solomon, in suits brought against him by ex-Gov. Scott, of South Carolina. Solomon was the President of a bank which failed, and the actions are brought to recover a loan of $5,000 in cash and $12,000 of bonds. The question involved is whether the loan was made to Solomon personally or to the bank.

FIVE YEARS IN STATE PRISON.

On the night of the 22d of October as Benedic Lazard, cook at the Hoffman House, was walking to his home at No. 155 West Twenty-fifth street, he was accosted by Mary Stuart, of No. 421 East Twenty-fifth street, who snatched off his fur cap and ran into an alley-way with it. Lazard followed her into the alley-way to get possession of his cap, and was met by Alfred Smith, a confederate of the woman, who struck him on the mouth with some hard substance, threw him on the floor and held him forcibly while the woman tore open his vest and coat and robbed him of $5 40—all the money in his possession. On regaining his feet Mr. Lazard gave the alarm, and Stuart and Smith were arrested by Officer Gillespie. The prisoners were placed on trial yesterday in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions, when the above facts were proved by Assistant District Attorney Rollins, and resulted in the conviction of both of petit larceny from the person. Judge Sutherland sentenced them to five years each in State Prison.

DECISIONS.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.
By Judge Barrett.

Salisbryth vs. Campbell.—The writ is discretionary, and should not be granted to enable the relator to secure an advantage from his own wrong or laches. Here he waited for over two years, and (without moving) permitted nearly all the work to be done by others free of expense to the City. Now, when the work is almost complete and the prices of labor and material are greatly reduced, he moves. This is not excused on the papers, and the excuse given in argument is entirely insufficient. It is therefore actually unnecessary to consider the other questions. Motion denied, with $10 costs.

Brown vs. West.—Opinion.

Simons vs. Simons.—I want all the papers in the case; the affidavits on which the order of publication was made; also those on which the reference was made.

Ballou vs. Haviland.—Opinion.

Zeimer vs. Agnew.—Motion granted and Receiver appointed—Mr. Charles Price.

By Judge Lawrence.

Hill vs. Agnew.—Granted.

Taber et al. vs. Perkins, Jr.—An allowance of $750 is granted to the plaintiffs.

Jones vs. Cornish.—The consents do not appear to be signed by all the parties, and I again call attention to Rule 73.

Steinfeld et al. vs. Salomon.—Motion granted, and reference to John H. Bird, Esq. 7 Abbt., 308; 4 B., 655.

Egan vs. Collins.—The undertaking having been prepared in the Common Pleas, must be re-executed and verified. Is this case one in which, under section 227 of the Code, an attachment can issue?

Dobbs vs. Reynolds.—If the plaintiff has any affidavits to submit in reply to those handed in on Monday by the defendant he may do so within five days from date, and after serving copies of such affidavits on the defendant's attorneys.

The Third Avenue Savings Bank vs. The Empire Laundry, &c.—The objection taken by the defendant's counsel seems to be well founded. See rule 39, and also Martine vs. Lewenstein, 6 How., 227, where the General Term of this court held that where the notice provided for by rule 39 is not served upon a party entitled to notice the report is not affirmed by the rule, so as to preclude such party from filing his exceptions at any time. If the defendant's time to file exceptions to the Referee's report has not expired it would appear to be irregular to enter judgment against them for a deficiency. Motion denied, without costs.

Thursday, Nov. 9, P. M.

Speculation on the Stock Exchange to-day was weak in tone, under an increased pressure to sell. The decline for the day was ⅛ to 3 ⅌ cent., with the greatest depression in the Granger stocks. The St. Paul shares were the weakest of the entire list, the common declining from 23 to 20, and the preferred from 54¼ to 51¾, with a recovery of ½@⅞ ⅌ cent. The North-west shares were affected by the decline in St. Pauls, and the common fell off from 37 to 35¾, but finally advanced to 37⅛. The preferred declined from 59⅛ to 58⅝, and subsequently recovered to 59⅛. Lake Shore declined from 56⅝ to 55 and closed at 55¼@55⅜. Western Union, after an early advance to 72⅝, became weak, and declined to 71¼, closing at 71⅝. Delaware, Lackawanna and Western declined from 74 to 73⅛, with a recovery at the close to 73½. New-Jersey Central declined from 36⅜ to 35¼, closing at the latter figure. Michigan Central, after advancing to 45¾, declined to 43¼, and recovered to 43½ at the close. Ohio and Mississippi declined from 8⅞ to 7¾, and closed at 7⅞. Wabash advanced from 5¾ to 7¼. Erie declined from 10⅝ to 10¼, and closed at 10⅜. Pacific Mail declined from 24½ to 24, with a fractional recovery at the close. The other changes were unimportant. The total number of sales for the day were 164,800 embracing 53,800 of Lake Shore, 31,300 of St. Paul, 28,600 of Western Union, and 17,900 of Michigan Central.

Money was comparatively dearer again to-day, and loaned up to 5 ⅌ cent. on call, lenders obtaining 4 ⅌ cent. at the close. Prime mercantile paper was discounted at 5 to 6 ⅌ cent. The national bank notes received for redemption at Washington to-day amounted to $500,000. The following were the rates of exchange on New-York at the undermentioned cities to-day: Savannah, buying ⅜ off, selling par@¼ off; Charleston, easy, 5-16@par; St. Louis, 125 discount; New-Orleans, commercial ⅜, bank ¼; Chicago, par, and Cincinnati, exchange dull, 100 discount.

The foreign advices report a decrease in the specie of the Bank of England for the week amounting to £1,296,000. The proportion last week of the bank's reserve to its liabilities remains unchanged—54⅛ ⅌ cent., as does also the bank rate of discount—2 ⅌ cent. Bullion to the amount of £90,000 sterling was withdrawn from the bank on balance to-day. The London market for consols was a shade higher, and United States bonds were also better, the former closing at 96⅜ for money and the account, and the latter at 103⅛ for 1865s, (old,) 109⅛ (after an early advance to 109½) for 1867s, 108½@108⅝ for 10-40s, and 106⅞@107 for new 5s. Erie was about steady at 10. The specie in the Bank of France increased by 23,850,000 francs during the week. Rentes closed at 105.20. At Frankfort United States new 5s were quoted at 102⅜.

The sterling exchange market was quiet and steady, with actual business at $4 81½@$4 81¾ for bankers, 60 day bills, and $4 83½@$4 83¾ for demand. The nominal asking rates remain unchanged at $4 82 for long, and $4 84 for sight drafts.

The gold speculation was active during part of the day, and the price advanced in the forenoon from 109⅝, the opening figure, to 109⅞, but afterward receded to, and closed at 109½. Cash gold was in fair demand, and 1⅛ to 4 ⅌ cent. was paid for carrying.

Government bonds were a fraction lower in the early dealings, but closed steady at about last evening's quotations. Railroad bonds were weak for a few issues, but were steady generally. Ohio and Mississippi seconds declined 3 ⅌ cent., Union Pacific Sinking Funds ⅛ ⅌ cent., do. firsts ⅜ ⅌ cent., and Michigan Central 7s, ¾ per cent., selling at 50, 91, 106¼ and 102¼, respectively. State bonds were firm. Virginia 6s, ex-matured coupon, sold up to 68¾, and Louisiana 7s to 60½.

All doubts as to the result of the Presidential election may be considered at an end. South Carolina, which the Democrats, yesterday, persisted in claiming, has elected CHAMBERLAIN by 8,000 majority, and as his vote runs behind that on the Presidential ticket, the State has, therefore, by a still larger majority cast its vote for HAYES. The Republican majority in Louisiana is so decided—amounting to at least 8,000—that the Democrats have given up the State, and with it, we trust, all intention of stirring up strife over the action of the Returning Board. Florida is ours beyond peradventure. Returns have been received from nineteen counties which give a Republican majority of 4,754, and which show a net gain of 849 over the majority of 1874. Twenty counties remain to be heard from, in which the Democrats had a majority of 3,151 two years ago. Conceding that this majority remains unbroken, the State is still Republican by a majority of 1,603. Assuming what is more likely to be true, that the counties not heard from will show the same ratio of net gain as the counties whose returns are complete, the Republican majority in the State will be over 2,000.

The Tilden organs claimed Illinois yesterday morning; they were claiming Ohio on their bulletins last night. To-day they may probably amuse themselves by claiming Massachusetts. They ought to be the best judges of the intellectual level of the people who look to them for information. While the fly-gobblers are being amused with these latest inventions of the "uncompoops," the leaders are intent on more serious business. A good deal of persuasive instruction has been poured into Florida during the last twenty-four hours. As, according to the Sun, "the election machinery of that State is in the hands of honest men who are the friends of Gov. TILDEN," the gist of this advice may be conjectured. There was a drily humorous Scotch Judge who prefaced a sentence on a female criminal in this fashion: "Honest woman, what made you steal your neighbor's cow?" As these "honest" persons in Florida have taken to wrecking railroad trains containing election returns, it may be found necessary for Uncle Sam to address them with some degree of sternness, after the manner of the judicial-minded Scotchman.

It is pleasant to find so pronounced a Democratic journal as the Petersburg (Va.) Index looking complacently upon the future, even with a Republican President. "No matter what may be the result of the election," it says, "we have a serene hope that the business affairs of the country will hereafter be established on a surer and more prosperous basis." Other journals of the same faith unwittingly furnish similar testimony. Business improvement has steadily gone on, and would go on, they declare, regardless of the result of the election. Of course, the inference is, that all the attempts to make Republican administration responsible for the hard times were, confessedly, mere partisan devices, which are discarded now they can be no longer serviceable. Apart from this consideration, the Petersburg editor renders good service to his neighbors when he reminds them that the elevation of Mr. HAYES to the Presidency will not prejudice their material interests, however much it may conflict with their wishes as politicians. Further than this, perhaps, a Southern Democrat could not be expected to go. We believe, however, that the South, by a judicious use of its opportunities, may profit enormously by the accession of Mr. HAYES to the Presidency. It has been deluded, hitherto, by the promise of direct gain, as a result of restored Democratic supremacy. It has neglected tangible advantages in its over-credulous reliance upon Democratic help. The mistake should be possible no longer. For the next four years the South must be content to see Federal power in Republican hands. It will be wise if it accept the situation in the spirit which animates the counsel of the Petersburg newspaper. Mr. HAYES' declaration, in his letter of acceptance, his character and the character of the men nearly allied to him, are pledges of just and even generous dealing toward the South, so far as the influence of the Executive extends in the working of the Government. There is, then, no reason why the South may not hope to realize its full share of the financial and business benefits for which the country looks with reasonable confidence. The excitement and uncertainty of the election have kept them back; and with the disappearance of these obstacles, business will surely revive. If the South will drop its sectionalism, it may soon be on a level with the best portions of the country.

Per contra, a Democratic newspaper in Texas, makes the reported success of Mr. TILDEN an occasion for giving free expression to the feeling entertained in some quarters toward Union men in the South, and especially toward men who have invoked Federal aid to secure freedom and purity at the ballot-box. All such the Austin Gazette consigns to merciless punishment. They are "villains" to whom it would show no mercy. "Let every mother's son of them be brought to condign punishment," is the classic lingo in which it declares its abhorrence of those who have dared to resist the shot-gun policy. We shall look with a good deal of curiosity for the ebullitions of passion which the less discreet of Southern journalists indulged under the mistaken idea that Mr. TILDEN is the new President. For the sake of the South we hope that the Petersburg Index has more imitators than the Austin Gazette.

A curious feature of the late excitement caused by the great change in the price of silver, as compared with gold, was a petition from the Bengal Chamber of Commerce to the Government of India, that they would suspend the coinage of silver for private persons. This, of course, would have made the volume of the silver currency depend on the discretion of the Government—a state of things which the inflationists would like to bring about with reference to our own currency. The Government very promptly refused the petition, saying, "No man or body of men can ascertain whether, at any particular moment, the interests of the community, as a whole, require an increase or diminution of the currency; still less how much increase or how much decrease is, at any moment, exactly required. No Government which aspires to keep its currency in a sound condition would be justified in attempting that impossible task; or in leaving the community, even for a short interval, without a fixed metallic standard of value." A peculiarly forcible comment on this sensible and truthful statement by the Indian Government is afforded in the fact that silver has already recovered from a good deal of the depression which had, at the time of the petition, taken place since 1873.

The Centennial Exposition comes to an end to-day with simpler ceremonies than those which marked its opening. As an appropriate celebration of the closing of the first century of our national existence, it has been in every way worthy of the occasion and of the Republic. As an exhibition of the arts and industries of many nations, it has been ample and highly successful. The Exposition was formally opened May 10, 1876. But during the six months which have elapsed, constant additions have been made to the great store of exhibits displayed. During this time the attendance has steadily increased, so that the number of those who passed in daily to see the mighty show long since exceeded that reported from any World's Fair ever held before. The managers, who have worked with untiring zeal and energy; the people of Pennsylvania, who have done so much to insure the success of the Exhibition; and the people of the United States, who share in the glory of this achievement, are all to be heartily congratulated on the noble results of this vast undertaking.

REPUBLICAN RESPONSIBILITIES.

With the elections of this year, the Republican Party enters on new responsibilities, differing but little in character from those which it had previously assumed, but of even greater force. Up to 1868, it was unquestionably the principal business of the Republican Party to protect the results of the war from the reaction which the Presidency of ANDREW JOHNSON aroused, and to which his peculiar "policy" gave form and substance. From 1868 to 1872, the chief obligation of the party was, while abating nothing of its fidelity to the principles established by the war, to place the public credit on a sure foundation, and to defeat the assaults made upon it by the Democratic Party, with its mad and wicked scheme for paying the bonds in irredeemable paper. That duty was honorably and bravely discharged. With 1872 new duties arose. The selection of Mr. GREELEY as a candidate by the Democratic Party, and the considerable support which he received from perfectly sincere and patriotic Republicans, were, as we pointed out at the time, significant indications that a strong sentiment in the North demanded that the Southern question should, as far as possible be closed, and that, at any rate, the Republican Party should do everything in its power to establish order, peace, justice, and prosperity in that section. At the same time, the circumstances of the hour, interpreted by the best Republicans in every part of the country, demanded that the Republican Party should address itself to the questions of the future, and particularly to the re-establishment of the currency upon a sound basis and to the reform of the civil service. Had the representatives of the party recognized the obligations which the situation imposed, and had they pressed to their fulfillment with courage and patient persistence, Gen. HAYES would hold the President's chair not by one electoral vote but by a strong majority, and the House of Representatives, instead of depending for its character on the vote of New-Hampshire, and accurate returns from a few close districts, would be firmly Republican.

It is not a pleasant task, at the moment of hard-earned success, when bitter and unscrupulous opponents are scheming to rob us of the fruits of the victory we have labored so greatly to win, to point out why the result has not been more decisive, or to recount the short-comings of our leaders. But the truth will never be more clearly understood or more keenly felt than now. No intelligent and candid Republican can look back over the last four years and set the prominent events in the history of the party opposite the criticism of the campaign just closed, without perceiving that the Republican Party might have surely taken the force from that criticism by simply living up to its own promises.

It was in the power of the Republicans to build up a reliable party organization in the South which should not be divided from its rival by a hateful color line, and this could have been done without sacrificing an iota of the valuable results of the war. Nothing was required except that the party should refrain from unnecessary legislation regarding the South, should deal fairly with the questions which might arise there, and should give the Federal appointments in that section only to men of known probity, who would compel the confidence of their fellow-citizens. Instead of this, the party spent its energies on the Supplemental Civil Rights bill, which was of doubtful constitutionality and absolutely worthless for its professed object; it trifled in a criminal manner with the complications in Louisiana and Alabama, and left the Federal service in the South substantially unchanged, with the rank abuses of many of its representatives unrebuked and unatoned for. We have no hesitation in saying that had the South been dealt with in the spirit in which the Wheeler-Foster Committee dealt with the Louisiana troubles, and had the Federal appointees been held to a strict account, we should to-day have possession of at least seven of the Southern States.

Apart from the Southern question, every one can see that an immense influence was exerted in the recent canvass by the depression of business. Many thousand votes were cast for the Democratic candidates in the hope—vague and unreasonable, but strong—that a change of parties would bring about better times. This depression might not have been prevented, but it could have been greatly lessened; and the Republican Party could have been disconnected from it, had Congress early adopted a well-digested policy for the resumption of specie payments. Up to the crash of 1873, little or nothing was done by the Government to correct the disorder of the currency, while much was allowed which strengthened the popular feeling that the period of irredeemable paper and unlimited speculations was to continue indefinitely. The Resumption act of 1875 was in the right direction, but it was crude, and it came too late.

Still more influential in the canvass was the condition of the civil service under the Republican Party. No one could deny that the service was better in many respects than it had ever been before, and very few really expected that it would be improved under a Democratic Administration. But the actual existence of serious evils was proved, and many people were ready to punish the Republicans for these, and trust the future to chance. The efforts of the better men in the party to make it certain that these evils would be honestly grappled with under Gen. HAYES prevented the hopeless defeat of the party, but they could not prevent thousands of honest men, who had little sympathy with the Democrats, from abandoning the Republican ranks. Certainly, it requires no special astuteness to see that this could have been entirely avoided. Had the party prosecuted in good faith the reform devised by Mr. CURTIS, at the call of President GRANT, no such defection would or could have taken place. But pride, obstinacy, and selfishness among the leaders, weariness and indifference on the part of the President, and want of intelligent conviction in the masses of the party stifled the reform in an early and disgraceful death. Instead of the results we might have had from it, we presented the country with the traffic in post traderships, the whisky frauds perpetrated with the connivance of an army of subordinate officials, and the conspiracy between the lobby and the politicians which drove Mr. BRISTOW and Mr. JEWELL out of the Cabinet. So far as the civil service is concerned, we made the bed in which we are not very comfortably lying.

This unvarnished recital of a few prominent facts in the immediate past throws all the light the party ought to need on the future. Our safety, as well as our duty, is in frankly meeting the obligations that present themselves. In the next four years the Republican Party must put the Southern question at rest so far as rectitude of intention, impartial fairness, and good Federal appointments can do it; and it must give the country a sound currency and a systematic reform of the civil service, or it must prepare to go into opposition, to wrest from its rivals the objects it would not itself seek.

TILDEN'S MAJORITY IN NEW-YORK.

It is a fact to be carefully noted by all intelligent persons that if Gov. TILDEN had been elected President on Tuesday, he would have been placed in that exalted office by the votes of some ten Assembly Districts in this City, where lives a population the most needy and the most ignorant of any on this continent. His total majority of say 30,000 in this State was given him by the First, Second, Fourth, Sixth, Eleventh, and Seventeenth Wards of this City. In the First, Second, and Third Districts, including the vilest haunts of the Metropolis, his majority over HAYES exceeded 10,000; in the Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth, it was about 9,000, and so on through such crowded quarters as Mackerelville, the Seventeenth Ward, and others like them, until over 50,000 was run up in this City. When a more intelligent and prosperous quarter is taken, like the Ninth, for instance, TILDEN stands only 4,293 to 4,220 for HAYES; and in the Eleventh, HAYES has 4,370 to 3,592 for his opponent, this district being inhabited by our most intelligent citizens.

If our readers will refer to the last census, they will see how these strong Democratic wards stand in the most ordinary school acquirements. The Second Ward—that vigorous outpost of the Democratic Party, and TWEED'S citadel—has 2,562 inhabitants who cannot read or write; the Fourth Ward, another centre of Democracy, has 2,332 illiterates; the Sixth, the Five Points region, which may be considered the stronghold of the Democrats, has 4,962, and the Seventh, a similar quarter, 4,862 who can neither read nor write. The Seventeenth Ward contains 2,105 of these intelligent residents, and the Twentieth, which has just polled so large a vote for Mr. TILDEN, has 5,695 of this valuable material for Democracy. On the other hand, the smallest number of "illiterates" are found in the Ninth Ward, which has always been the Republican ward. The sixty thousand persons in New-York who can neither read nor write are residents mainly of those wards which gave Mr. TILDEN New-York State, and nearly conferred on him the Presidency. More than this, these districts contain more criminal and disreputable persons who can read and write than any similar region in America; they have more liquor shops, gambling saloons, and resorts of crime than any equal space of ground in the world.

Throughout those wards where our poorest people live it will be found almost uniformly that the Republicans are the most decent and industrious of these classes, though undoubtedly many honest working men have been beguiled by Democratic fallacies temporarily to the other party. Mr. TILDEN'S majority, then, in New-York was given by its most ignorant constituency. The illiterate and most destitute classes of the cities united with the ex-rebels of the South and nearly made him President. It is a combination which we recommend to those highly respectable citizens of New-York who supported Mr. TILDEN, for their consideration. Is it a union of elements either safe or desirable for the country? A party whose foundation strength is in ignorance on one side and treason and disaffection on the other, is not one which patriots ought to desire to prevail.

We have sufficiently admitted the short-comings of the Republican Party. We are ready to accept the closeness of the vote, as to a certain extent, a vote of "want of confidence" in some of our leaders. But would such a party as gave Mr. TILDEN this city do better? Is it desirable for the interests of property and order, to keep up this union between the ignorance of the North and the disaffection of the South?

A BRIEF PRESIDENCY.

It was not a cheerful and confident party which assembled at the TILDEN mansion on Wednesday night. The feast was like BELSHAZZAR'S. To be sure, the guests did not see the handwriting on the wall. They were continually looking for it. The magnates, great and small, had met to give their allegiance and congratulations to "the President-elect." The fire-works were provided. The band was under waiting orders—around the corner. The President of a night sat at the head of the hospitable board, and cried, "What ho, menial! a beaker of red wine!" But as he poured, his hand trembled. From guest to guest the panic spread. Confusion sat on every countenance when the head nincompoop burst in, with pallor on his brow and a telegram in his hand. "HAYES is ahead!" This was all his message, and he sank into one of POTTIER & STYMUS' chairs, (paid for by the Statute of Limitations) and huskily whispered, "Give me a drink, HEWITT," like a sick girl. The banquet broke up in most admired disorder. The fire-works were hidden away in the cellar. The band, dismissed, went away grumbling. The impromptu serenade was snuffed out, and the impromptu speech was put away in lavender. The banqueters gloomily dispersed, tossing off the "heel taps" as they left the board. The jollification was indefinitely posponed on account of sickness in the family.

It was a brief administration—briefer than Pope JOAN'S, or ABBOU HASSAN'S. Nevertheless, it was jolly while it lasted. When Mr. TILDEN nominated himself at St. Louis, he solemnly drew together the heads of five of his confidential friends, and as solemnly said that he saw in this unexpected result the hand of the people. When Duke GWIN, the Mephisto of this unhappy politician, told him that he was elected President, he said that he was very much obliged indeed, and he should not announce his Cabinet and policy until next day. But, in the gush of the hour, he sent a written speech to Tammany Hall, where a fragrant crowd was yelling beneath the gaslights. "The President-elect" informed the great unwashed that they had "covered themselves with lasting renown." Whereupon the crowd, thinking that this meant something complimentary and promising, yelled again and went over to Irving Hall, where a professional humorist cracked jokes by the hour. This funny fellow said: "I think you may take my word for it that SAMUEL J. TILDEN has over two hundred electoral votes." The unthinking cohorts cheered again. They were willing to forget that this was the same authority who had given his word for it (in the newspapers) that SEYMOUR had accepted the Saratoga nomination, when he had done nothing of the kind. They forgivingly took his word for it again, and went home to dream of fat places in public offices, and to wake up betimes to learn that HAYES was elected.

Nevertheless, it was a happy reign while it endured. The World grew hysterically funny as it cracked its ponderous jokes about Republicans who had lost bets and Democrats who had won. It indulged in a wild rigadoon over "the grave of the Republican Party;" magnanimously complimented HAYES as a defeated candidate; then, having relieved its pent-up feelings, calmly returned to its tenses of Latin verbs and calf's head à la Anglaise. And the Tribune, by turns it wept and smiled, as it hailed "Mr. TILDEN, the President," and said, "We may as well turn ourselves about." All that day the telegrams came in with gloom for the Democrats. The Evening Express cheered the drooping spirits of the faithful with windy "extras," which had startling telegrams, but no news. The gentlemen who had cheered themselves hoarse, and had foreign missions in their mind's eye as they cheered, grew weak about the knees as the day wore on; they suddenly reflected that they had engagements in Westchester and Cattaraugus. Now and then a preposterous dispatch came to say that Ohio and Massachusetts had gone for TILDEN. These were desperately believed in, and some romantic Democrats even circulated the tale that Illinois and Nebraska were for "New-York's favorite son." Under the stimulus of such delusions the banqueters assembled to wait for the handwriting on the wall. They were resolved to die game. Perhaps they thought that brag and bluster would make falsehood forever seem like truth.

It was a good administration. "Mr. Tilden, President," dispensed promises and good cheer with a liberal hand. Ten men were appointed Ministers to England, and seven more had begun to study French, as a preliminary to accepting a commission to represent the United States at the French republican court. One-half of the grown men who were in the last Democratic torch-light procession had gone down to take a look at the Custom-house, and pick out the office which had been engaged to them. JOHN KELLY had begun to write his protest against CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS as Secretary of State. The President for a day enjoyed himself very much. He even forgave the World, and sent word to that eccentric organ that he considered it a truly great newspaper. All was happiness, forgiveness, brotherly love, and jollity. For twelve hours the dream was unbroken. For twelve hours the long-famished Democracy fed bountifully on phantom pap and ghostly plunder. But the time came when the play was played out. The curtain went down on the Tilden Administration. The banners of victory were folded up and put away. The fire-works were not lighted, and the music was hushed. Probably the actors felt just as good over their one day of playing at victory as they would if the day had been longer and they had begun to quarrel over the distribution of the spoils. As it is, they have avoided inevitable heart-burnings and internecine feuds. Their administration is over, and by and by Mr. ABRAM S. HEWITT will issue another general order and tell us what he thinks about it.

EXTRADITION WITH CANADA.

We imagine that the Canadian Minister of Justice has put a rather forced construction upon the telegram received from Lord CARNARVON with reference to extradition and negotiations alleged to be in progress between Great Britain and the United States. There can be no probability of a temporary resumption of the old treaty growing out of the present state of negotiations, simply because, as we have been authoritatively informed from Washington, no such negotiations are pending. What the British Government may propose or expect we cannot tell. The abrogation of the former treaty having been the result of its action, it must take the initiative in regard to a new treaty. This it has not yet done, and the whole subject therefore remains in abeyance. The idea of a temporary arrangement is hardly admissible. The former treaty fell to the ground because Great Britain refused to comply with its requirements in the sense in which they were understood at the time of its negotiation. And extradition will be suspended either until the British authorities recede from the position they assumed, or until fresh negotiations bring the two countries to a distinct understanding upon the subject.

It is creditable to the Canadians that they have endeavored to keep alive the spirit of the extradition arrangement long after its letter was dead. They had no sympathy with the arbitrary and unwarranted construction to which the Imperial Government obstinately adhered. Their own obvious interest worked in conjunction with neighborly comity; and they have more than once delayed the release of American criminals arrested in the Provinces and held for extradition, under the hope that the treaty would in some form be once more rendered operative. The case reported from Toronto probably belongs to this category. A Michigan murderer is retained in custody on the mere chance, apparently, that communications between the two National Governments will by and by justify his surrender.

The question is a serious one to Canada, whose interests are practically identical with those of our Northern tier of States, and whose public men evidently have no sympathy with the view to which Lord DERBY and his colleagues are committed. The Ottawa Government, indeed, had previously proposed an enlargement of the list of offenses covered by extradition, and is otherwise in accord with the position held by our own Government. The colonial relation in this instance entails a substantial grievance. The Canadians must see their country become a place of refuge for American criminals, and their own criminals safe within rifle-shot of the authority they have evaded, and all because officials in Downing street choose to tack to a treaty qualifications at variance with its essential provisions. Why should Canada be thus fettered in a matter of vital moment to its people? It is free to enact a tariff suited to its peculiar circumstances. It cherishes a policy of incidental protection in spite of the imperial policy of free trade. It has asserted its right to issue its own coin, in opposition to the pretensions of the imperial authorities. It conducts its own postal negotiations direct with our Postmaster General at Washington, and the results are mutually advantageous. What but paltry technicalities hinder it from negotiating with Mr. FISH an extradition treaty adapted to the wants of conterminous peoples, and in no manner affected by the caprices of British ministers?

DR. SCHLIEMANN.

It is announced that the Turkish Government has authorized Dr. SCHLIEMANN to resume his excavations on the alleged site of Troy, and that the learned digger, having laid in a new copy of Homer and a large supply of spades, will immediately resume his labors.

Some misapprehension exists in the public mind as to the object of Dr. SCHLIEMANN'S labors. It is generally thought that he has hitherto been digging in search of the alleged City of Troy. In point of fact, he has been trying to exhume the Iliad, and his success in so doing has been remarkable. There are very grave doubts whether there ever was such a person as HOMER, or such a city as Troy, and granting the existence of the latter, its true site is wholly conjectural. There is, however, no sort of doubt as to the existence of the Iliad, as every college Freshman sadly knows, and hence Dr. SCHLIEMANN showed a praiseworthy discrimination in digging for the topographical and biographical incidents of the latter. At first he was rather embarrassed with the richness of the ruined cities which he unearthed, for he exhumed no less than four consecutive buried cities, one above another. The lowest of these he decided to call Troy—throwing the rest away as comparatively valueless—and in this so-called Troy he found everything of interest which is mentioned in the Iliad.

The maps which the good Doctor drew were extremely ingenious. They contained a plan of Troy, showing the principal buildings and such localities as have interesting Homeric associations. Priam's palace, the town pump, the cottage occupied by Helen, the Lyceum, the spot where the Trojan horse disgorged its contents, the horse-block on which Anchises perched himself in order to climb on the pious shoulders of Æneas, the Post Office, and the prominent banking and insurance offices, were all duly displayed on SCHLIEMANN'S maps, and gave the alleged city nearly as imposing an appearance as is presented by the map of some projected town in the far West. As for interesting relics, SCHLIEMAN found them by the basketful. His method was a peculiar one. He would strive to put himself in the place of some respectable Trojan, and then imagine how he would have conducted himself in any given contingency. Thus, he said to himself, "If I had been Priam, I would have put my portable property in a small box, and as soon as the Greeks entered the city I would have slipped out of the back door, climbed the back fence by means of the step-ladder, and gone out of the west gate, where a cab would have awaited me." Having thus satisfied himself as to what Priam actually did, he followed that respectable monarch's course until he reached the west gate, where he picked up the box of portable property which Priam had evidently found too heavy, and which the cabman had refused to carry except at an exorbitant price. In like manner Dr. SCHLIEMANN was able to divine where to look for Helen's hair-pins, and where to find the blue spectacles with which Paris strove to disguise himself from the eyes of the private detective employed by Menelaus. Thus the exhumation of the Iliad was attended with extraordinary success, and there is no doubt that Dr. SCHLIEMANN in his future diggings will find every sort of object not absolutely inconsistent with a liberal interpretation of the Iliad.

Great as is the interest which attaches to the hair-pins of Helen, and the fine-toothed comb of Paris, there are those who feel that Dr. SCHLIEMANN has dug quite long enough at Troy, and that he ought to exercise his remarkable genius in other fields. He is just the man to dig on the site of the Garden of Eden, and to reclaim the articles of personal property which our first parents left behind in the suddenness of their departure. He would not have the slightest difficulty in determining the exact locality of the primeval paradise. All he would think it necessary to do would be to visit the Plain of Mesopatamia; to pick out a good-sized garden spot, and to announce that he had fixed the exact position of the Garden of Eden. Then he would begin to dig and to discover with the energy and success which has hitherto characterized him. He would soon lay bare the asphalt paths over which ADAM was accustomed to walk, and would find his lawn-roller and sickle in a rusty but still easily recognizable condition. As soon as the excavations became large enough to warrant a map, he would construct one calculated to bring tears to the eyes of the most hardened geologist. On that map would be marked the position of the apple-tree which EVE had such melancholy cause to remember, together with a dotted line, labeled "Probable route of the Serpent on entering and retiring from the garden." That same valuable map would also show "ADAM'S Swimming Pool," the "Birthplace of EVE," "The Croquet Ground," and the "Sartorial Fig-tree." As for relics, SCHLIEMANN would find them to order for the use of clergymen's families and Sunday-schools. Fig-leaf aprons would be picked up by the sharp-eyed searcher on every hedge. Small fish-bones, "supposed to have been used as hair-pins;" polished bits of tomato cans, labeled "hand mirrors," and innumerable quantities of agricultural tools and packages of Weathersfield garden-seeds would be sent to Europe and America by the ship-load, and if somebody were to order a slip from the original apple-tree, Dr. SCHLIEMANN would send out more young apple-trees in the course of two years than the united nurseries of Long Island would furnish in ten.

When such a field as this is open to the good German discoverer, it is a pity to see him wasting his time at Troy. Trojan relics are, of course, very well in their way, but the public has somewhat lost interest in them, and in any event they are less interesting than relics from Eden would be. After what Dr. SCHLIEMANN has found at Troy, there is not the slightest doubt that he could find anything at any other locality that anyone might desire. Let him go to Mesopotamia and exhume Paradise, and it may be safely predicted that his discoveries there will be precisely as valuable as those which he has made on the alleged site of Troy.

DESTRUCTION OF BANK NOTES.

CIRCULAR OF THE CONTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY TO NATIONAL BANKS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—The Controller of the Currency has issued a circular saying: "It has become necessary to present for the consideration of the national banks a fact which has occasioned much inconvenience, and which is the cause of daily increasing embarrassment, namely, the rapidity with which the national bank notes are wearing out and being returned for destruction, taken in connection with the large number of agents appointed to witness the destruction in behalf of the banks. It is necessary to destroy the notes of from one hundred to one hundred and fifty banks in one day, and the names of about one hundred and fifty persons are registered as agents. Much time is consumed in looking up these gentlemen. Some of them cannot be found when wanted, some are dilatory, and others neglect to attend when notified. Then, when they assemble, the number is often so great that there is no room for their accommodation, and great confusion, delay, and inconvenience are likely to result. The matter has at length reached that point when some change must be made; some relief must be obtained, or the public business will be seriously obstructed." The Controller has accordingly concluded that the most feasible method of obviating the difficulties of the situation will be to submit the names of a sufficient number of reliable agents, and request the banks to make a choice from that number. The following names are presented: The national banks of Washington City, Messrs. A. S. Pratt and Son, J. C. G. Kennedy, T. W. Patobin, Esq., Messrs. Middleton & Co., Lewis Johnson & Co., and Joseph S. Barnett, Esq. All these will be in daily attendance at the office, and will save the necessity of giving special notice, as well as loss of time in looking for them. The necessities of the case have forced him to adopt this plan, and while he does not wish to be arbitrary, such regulations must be prescribed as will prevent unreasonable delay in the transaction of public business.

LIFE INSURANCE BUSINESS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Three events of great importance to life insurance companies, and to persons holding policies therein, have recently transpired:

1. The decision by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in the case of Morris vs. The Pennsylvania Mutual Life Insurance Company, deciding that by the acts of 1872 and 1873 the non-forfeiture law applies to all companies doing business in that Commonwealth, even when chartered by other States. By this decision a policy issued since 1872 by any company permitted to transact business in Massachusetts, upon the life of a citizen of that State, is not absolutely forfeited by the non-payment of a stipulated premium when due, but eighty per cent. of the reserve, or present value of the policy is applied as a single premium to extend the insurance over an ascertainable period. For example, if a person aged thirty-five insured July 1, 1872, for $10,000, payable at death, omitted to pay the annual premium due July 1, 1876, his insurance would be extended, without further payment, for a period of four years and forty-six days, or until Aug. 15, 1880.

2. The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, as delivered by Mr. Justice Bradley in the case of Life Insurance Companies vs. Stratham and others. It is thus established by the highest court in the land that if a person is prevented by circumstances beyond his control, as in the case of war, from paying a stipulated premium when due, the insurance is forfeited; "but in such case the assured is entitled to the equitable value of the policy arising from the premium actually paid. This equitable value * * * may be recovered in an action at law or suit in equity."

3. The failure of the Continental Life Insurance Company of New-York, with nominal assets exceeding $6,000,000. The occurrence of these important events should call attention to the nature of the reserves held by Life Insurance Companies, amounting, as they do in this country alone, to over $450,000,000. These vast accumulations result from the fact that life insurance has been purchased hitherto, almost without exception, by uniform average or commuted premiums extending over the whole of life, or for a stated number of years. Such premiums are necessarily more than sufficient to pay death claims and expenses during the earlier years of a policy, in order that they may be sufficient in the later years. The excess each year is laid aside for accumulation as a reserve, or payment in advance, and must, by law, be invested in certain securities. If the policy-holder should relieve the company from the obligation to insure him in future years, and for which he has paid in advance, it would seem only just that a portion at least of such advance payments should be returned to him. The laws of Massachusetts recognize this obligation to the individual policy-holder by compelling every company doing business in that State to set aside eighty per cent. of the reserve or net value of the policy as a single premium to extend the insurance without further payment. The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States above quoted, provides that in certain cases—why not in all—the omission to pay a stipulated premium when due should work a forfeiture of the insurance, but the equitable value of the policy should be paid in cash, and may be recovered in an action at law or suit in equity. The policy contracts of nearly all the companies are so worded that if any premium is not paid on or before the date when due, the policy is null and void, and all payments made thereon are forfeited. This is all wrong. The equitable surrender value in cash for each successive year should be inserted in every policy purchased by uniform annual premiums. Otherwise the individual is entirely at the mercy of the company in case he is unwilling or unable to keep up his insurance. If the managers of companies were compelled to pay an equitable surrender value in each case, it would not only be the best possible check against extravagance and incompetent management, but such a failure as that of the Continental would be impossible. But there is no necessity for confining life insurance to the plan of uniform or level premium, which involves large accumulations or payments in advance for insurance which may never be needed, or which the individual may not live to enjoy. The natural plan would be to pay each year for the cost of insurance during that year, including a suitable margin for expenses, and to guard against adverse contingencies, such as might arise from an epidemic, for instance. In this way the protection of life insurance could be purchased at far less cost for a number of years, and there would be no necessity for piling up such vast accumulations as are now held by life insurance companies. Such accumulations, already the subject of deep concern among thoughtful men, may be injudiciously managed or insecurely invested, are entirely beyond the control of the owners, and offer a fearful temptation to unscrupulous and designing men to get possession of a company, in order that the funds may be manipulated for their own benefit. By this natural or yearly renewable plan of insurance, which is both safe and inexpensive, the protection of life insurance may be secured, each year by itself, and just so long as that protection is needed. When no longer needed, the assured may cease to pay without being obliged to mourn over confiscated accumulations, as is now the case too often. Unless the equitable surrender value in cash for each year is guaranteed in the policy contract, prudent men will soon cease to purchase insurance by the costly method of uniform premium, particularly as they may secure the same protection at less cost by the yearly-renewable plan, and keep their funds for accumulation under their own control. The distinction should be clearly drawn between money paid for insurance and money paid for mere accumulation, as are the reserve portions of uniform premiums. If this is not done, intelligent men will certainly choose the insurance company for the former and a well-managed savings bank for the latter, thus blending the best feature of the two institutions.

SHEPPARD HOMANS.

WESTERN UNION BUILDING, NEW-YORK, Monday Oct. 30, 1876.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—The receipts from internal revenue to-day were $339,236 78, and from Customs $445,401 93.

Peter Lusbey, who was acquitted a few months since of the charge of murdering a negro in Uniontown, was found yesterday near Forestville, St. George's County, Md., with his head crushed and two bullet-holes in it. It is thought he was murdered to avenge the death of the negro killed by him.

THE ALABAMA CLAIMS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—In the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims to-day the following judgments for the loss of personal effects and wages were announced: Case No. 1,922, Bernard Redmond, Salem, Mass., dismissed; No. 1,982, Joseph Le Barre, Provincetown, Mass., $450; No. 1,931, John W. Davis, Provincetown, Mass., $450; No. 2,023, Frank L. Allyne, dismissed; No. 2,025, Ernest E. Domansky, dismissed.

THE VOTE OF CONNECTICUT.

The Hartford Courant of Thursday says: "The election of Tuesday settled it that a rainy day will not prevent the people of Connecticut from going to the polls when they are in earnest. The total vote for President exceeds 120,000, or 20,000 more than the highest vote ever before polled and about 24,000 more than the Presidential vote of 1872. Mr. Tilden's plurality, with three small towns to hear from, is 2,678, and Mr. Hubbard's plurality is 3,455. The total Greenback vote for President so far as reported is 326, and the Prohibition vote 224. For Governor, the Greenback candidate has 632, and the Prohibitionist 795. The returns from the country towns show that except for the certificate voting and other frauds by which large majorities have been figured in the cities, Connecticut would have given an old-fashioned Republican majority. The change in the Legislature is in the nature of a tidal wave. The Democratic majority of 96 on joint ballot in April last is wiped out, and the Republicans have a majority of 37. In every county the Republicans have made decided gains."

THE LEGISLATURE OF NEW-JERSEY.

The Trenton Gazette of Thursday morning says: "The Legislature is almost a drawn battle. The Democrats have two majority in the House, and one in the Senate, making three majority on joint ballot. But in some of the districts the vote is very close, and the official returns may yet change the result. It is not at all impossible that Mr. Thorn is elected in Burlington County, nor is it quite certain that Mr. Cavilier is defeated for the Assembly in that county. At all events, it is plain that the Democrats have not carried the State by a tidal wave, and the retention of power by them will depend altogether upon the manner in which they employ it next Winter."

A STORM IN THE LOWER PROVINCES

HALIFAX, Nov. 9.—The rain-storm continues, and all outward-bound vessels remain in port. The American brigantine formerly reported ashore at Porter's Passage, east of Halifax, is the Elizabeth, of New-York, from St. John, N. B., for Queenstown. She has become a total wreck. The crew is saved.

THE CLOSING EXHIBITION.

SCENES OF THE LAST DAY BUT ONE.

GREAT INFLUX OF PHILADELPHIANS INTO THE GROUNDS—BANQUET TO COMMISSIONERS OF FOREIGN NATIONS BY THE FINANCE COMMITTEE—PRESIDENT GRANT IN THE CHAIR—PROGRAMME FOR THE CLOSING CEREMONIES OF TO-DAY.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 9.—The fireworks on the Centennial Grounds this evening attracted to the vicinity probably the largest crowd of spectators yet seen in that quarter. The multitude within the grounds was largely exceeded in numbers by that which surrounded the enclosure, and filled every available space for miles around from which a view of the display was obtainable. The pyrotechnics were divided into two separate displays, that of Messrs. C. T. Brock & Co., of London, taking the precedence of that of Prof. Samuel Jackson of Philadelphia. The first display began with a general illumination of the grounds at half past six o'clock, during which 100 large rockets, 55-inch shells, and six large magnesium balloons made their flight. These were followed at short intervals by a simultaneous flight of fifty 5-inch shells of crimson and lapis lazuli stars, an ascent of one hundred brilliant tourbillsons, thirty large rockets with twinkling stars, and twenty golden fountains, with a battery of 500 large Roman Candles. The remainder of the programme comprised volleys of 8, 10, and 12-inch shells, mines of saucissons, and a great cascade of fire 210 feet long and 100 feet high. The most noticeable pieces were those of seven flying pigeons flying along their wires to and from their cot, and a pair of guilloche wheels, with a chromotrope device fifty feet in diameter, probably the largest of the kind ever seen in America.

The blowing of the steam fog horn was the signal for the opening of Prof. Jackson's display. First, there was an ascension of six gas balloons, illuminated with crimson, emerald, and purple fires and shooting stars; next a flight of towering rockets, which, at an altitude of 3,000 feet, liberated thirteen floating stars, emblematical of the original States of the Union. A battery of bomb-shells and a flight of signal rockets were followed by a beautiful figure in silver-fire representing the arms of the city inclosed in a net-work of coruscating gold. In addition to a fusilade of bombs, a flight of honorary rockets, and a grand discharge of shells, throwing lights of prismatic splendor there was a beautiful device, gem of the pyrotechnic art, showing every color and tint, fixed and revolving fire, known to the art. The seal of the State was the eleventh piece. The concluding spectacle covered an area of 10,000 feet, and showed an immense pyrotechnic temple with a cluster of thirteen columns supporting a dome studded with thirty-eight stars surrounding the seal of the United States. The temple was flanked by two gorgeous fountains, and followed by a grand discharge of rockets.

The Department of Admissions authorizes the announcement that on Sunday next the Exhibition Grounds will be open free to the public, but that the buildings will be kept closed. No passes of admission to the latter will be issued.

GREAT INFLUX OF PHILADELPHIANS YESTERDAY—PREPARATIONS FOR CLOSING DAY—THE PROGRAMME.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 9.—Though there had been no official appointment of to-day as Philadelphia Day, the people of the city flocked to the grounds in almost unprecedented numbers, apparently determined to unite in a general celebration of the magnificent success of the Exhibition. No formal ceremonies were held. Mayor Stokley was present during part of the afternoon, and cordially welcomed many of the visitors, but no formal reception was attempted. The pyrotechnic displays in the evening attracted many thousand spectators. The feverish excitement of the election manifested itself during the afternoon at the telegraph office in the Department of Public Comfort, where telegrams from Florida upon the Presidential issue were read to boisterous crowds. Commissioner McCormick, Secretary of the National Republican Executive Committee, was present during the afternoon to deliver a lecture on Arizona.

The following is the programme for the closing ceremonies, which will take place to-morrow:

At sunrise a Federal salute of thirteen guns will be fired from George's Hill by the Keystone Battery, and simultaneously from the United States steamer Plymouth in the harbor.

1. Inauguration March by Richard Wagner—Orchestra; Theodore Thomas, musical director.
2. Prayer—Rev. Joseph A. Reiss.
3. Choral Fugue by S. Bach—Orchestra.
4. Address—Hon. D. J. Morrill, United States Centennial Commissioner from Pennsylvania and Chairman of the Executive Committee.
5. Selections from the Dettinger "De Deum"—Chorus and orchestra.
6. Address—Hon. John Welsh, President of the Centennial Board of Finance.
7. Finale—Fifth symphony of Beethoven—Orchestra.
8. Address—Hon. A. T. Goshorn, Director General.
9. Hallelujah chorus from the "Messiah," by Handel—Chorus and orchestra.
10. Address, Hon. Joseph R. Hawley, President of the United States Centennial Commission.
11. America—Chorus and orchestra. The audience will join in the singing. During the singing of "America" the original flag of the American Union, first displayed by Commodore Paul Jones on the Bon Homme Richard, will be unfurled in front of the Main Building above the platform, and a salute of forty-seven guns, one for each State and Territory, will be fired from George's Hill by the Keystone Battery, and simultaneously from the United States Steamer Plymouth in the harbor.
12. The President of the United States will declare the Centennial Exhibition of 1876 closed.
13. Doxology, Old Hundred—Chorus and Orchestra, the audience joining.

The Centennial chimes will be played by Prof. Widdows at sunrise, noon, and sunset, the airs of all nations being given during the firing of the salutes. Following the ceremonies the chimes will play in conjunction with the First Brigade band the new national air—Salute to the Flag—words and music by Herbert A. Preston, of Washington, D. C.

Invitations to participate in the exercises have been issued to the President of the United States and his Cabinet, the Diplomatic Corps, the foreign Commissioners, and foreign Legations, Ambassadors, and other representatives of foreign Governments, the Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, and heads of departments of the Federal Government, Governors of States and Territories, and numerous other officials. The ceremonies will begin soon after 2 o'clock.

The gentlemen who are interested in the success of the permanent exhibition movement, have issued invitations for a public meeting of the citizens of Philadelphia, which is to be held in the Common Council Chamber on Saturday, in favor of the retention of the main building for a permanent international exhibition. The new company will be called the "International Exhibition Company of Philadelphia," and notice has been given of an application for a charter, with a capital of $600,000, divided into 6,000 shares of $100 each.

The foreign Centennial Commissioners were entertained at dinner this afternoon in St. George's Hall by the Centennial Commission and Board of Finance. The hall was superbly decorated, and flags of all nations were displayed. Among the United States officials present were President Grant, Secretary Fish, Attorney General Taft, and Judges Waite, Strong, Bradley, and Davis of the United States Supreme Court. Gen. Hawley introduced President Grant, who presided, with a brief address, in which he alluded to the kind spirit manifested by the foreign commissioners toward this country. He then called upon the representatives of the various nations, in alphabetical order, who responded in warm and glowing terms of praise to the greatness of this country, and to the admirable features of the International Exhibition, and brotherly spirit manifested toward them by the Americans. Several toasted the next Centennial, with fervent wishes for continued and increasing prosperity. During the evening, national airs of the various countries were played by the band. The entertainment was continued until a late hour.

The reception given to the British Commission, represented by Sir Edward Thornton, was of the most enthusiastic character. Among the prominent persons present were Gov. Rice, of Massachusetts; Bedle, of New-Jersey; Storm, of New-Hampshire, and Hartranft, of Pennsylvania, and the entire body of Commissioners from foreign Governments.

PENNSYLVANIA.

ADDRESS OF THE REPUBLICAN STATE COMMITTEE.

Under the belief that the Democrats were successful in the national contest, the following address to the Republicans of Pennsylvania was issued by the State Committee:

HEAD-QUARTERS REPUBLICAN STATE COMMITTEE, PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8, 1876.

REPUBLICANS OF PENNSYLVANIA: Your work in the late momentous struggle demands and deserves commendation. Your two great cities, Philadelphia and Pittsburg, bravely held the outer forts, on the Delaware River in the east and the Ohio River in the West. So guarded against the invader, the brave men inside surpassed themselves in patriotic heroism. Our superb Commonwealth has been made by them more impregnable than it was in the days of the rebellion. Your admirable organization, in the mass and in detail, must be preserved from this hour, and from this spot we must maintain it, holding the Democratic Party, which has secured a bare majority of the electoral vote only by undeniable force and fraud, to all its pledges, while sternly adhering to our own. The Republican Party of Pennsylvania have thus a double duty before them. They must watch the enemy in his new power, while vigilantly preserving their allegiance to their own principles. In this State we have won everything of national significance. We have removed a Democratic Legislature from our State capital; we have gained probably eight members of Congress; we have secured a Jackson and a Lincoln majority of the popular vote. The credit is due to you, Republicans of Pennsylvania, simply because you have only thought of your country, and not of personal disappointments and trifling side issues. True to your glorious past, you will be found equal to all the responsibilities of the future. By order of the State Committee.

HENRY M. HOYT, Chairman.

A. WILSON NORRIS, Secretary.

SHOWING THEIR TEETH ALREADY.

WHAT THE LOYAL MEN IN THE SOUTH MIGHT EXPECT IN THE EVENT OF TILDEN'S ELECTION—AN OUTSPOKEN TILDENITE IN TEXAS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

AUSTIN, Nov. 9.—The following editorial appeared in the Austin Gazette this morning, written under the belief that Tilden had been elected. It indicates the fate of loyal men in the South if Mr. Tilden is elected:

"The tables should now be turned on the villains who have ordered and used United States troops for suppressing a free ballot in Southern States, and they should be prosecuted and punished to the full extent of the law. The people of sister States have yielded to brute force and been denied a free ballot, and, now that Tilden is elected President, let every mother's son of them be brought to condign punishment."

STRAWS.

DEMOCRATIC METHODS IN FLORIDA.

The following dispatch from Gov. Stearns, of Florida, was received in this City yesterday:

There is no doubt of our majority in this State if we can secure an honest canvass. The indications are that violence is to be freely resorted to, so as to prevent any returns from any remote points in the interior. Our special train from Tallahassee last night for the Chattahoochie to collect returns from the Western counties was Kukluxed a few miles west of here and the train thrown from the track, which was torn up and blockaded in several places.

A SIGNIFICANT INTIMATION.

From Yesterday's Sun.

There is no danger that the vote of Florida will be rejected or changed by fraudulent contrivances, for the election machinery of that State is in the hands of honest men, who are the friends of Gov. Tilden.

THE FEELING IN NEW-YORK STATE.

REPUBLICANS REJOICING—A PROCESSION AND SERENADE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COMSTOCKS, Nov. 9.—We have had a grand illumination and torchlight procession here to-night in honor of the election of Hon. Isaac V. Baker to the Assembly. The Granville Brass Band, the Whitehall Band, and Capt. Smith's Drum-corps serenaded Mr. Baker, who made a brief speech.

BUFFALO IN A FEVER OF EXCITEMENT.

BUFFALO, Nov. 9.—The city is in a feverish state of excitement over the special telegrams received by partisan papers on the result of the national ticket. The telegraph offices and bulletin boards in front of them and the newspaper offices are eagerly watched by large crowds. There is considerable speculation on the result by betting men.

THE FEELING IN OTHER LOCALITIES.

EXCITEMENT IN BOSTON—THE NEWSPAPER OFFICES CROWDED—DEEP BUT SUBDUED FEELING IN WASHINGTON.

BOSTON, Nov. 9.—The excitement in this city runs high, and the streets are packed with anxious people awaiting definite election news. It is almost impossible to get near the newspaper offices. Such universal interest in any political event has never been known here before.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—There is a condition of excitement prevalent in this city to-day unprecedented in any election. There is a noticeable absence of anything like boisterousness, and the feeling is absolutely intense, and so deep-seated that the large crowds in front of the newspaper and telegraph offices remain quiet to an extent that is surprising. In the Executive departments no business is being done, and every one, with almost breathless anxiety, is awaiting a definite return from any one of the States regarded as doubtful.

TILDEN CELEBRATION POSTPONED.

THE CONNECTICUT DEMOCRATS GLOOMY AND IRASCIBLE—A PARADE DEFERRED UNTIL LOUISIANA AND FLORIDA ARE FURTHER HEARD FROM.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARTFORD, Nov. 9.—The excitement here has been very great all day. The Democratic bulletins have kept up a contradictory appearance of things, and have had about them crowds of anxious spectators over the result of the election; while the Republican bulletins have cheered the supporters of Hayes, and, in a great measure, have convinced Democratic partisans that the information imparted by them was the most trustworthy. The Hartford Times, in its latest edition, claims the election of Tilden by the people; but intimates that he may be cheated out of it, and is altogether sour and savage. The Republicans are calm, and not at all disturbed over Democratic threats, having become accustomed to that kind of talk. The Democrats had made complete arrangements for a grand parade of "Boys in White" to-night, and proposed to bring out banners and transparencies made for the occasion, but it was given up, the Times announcing that "as the Republicans are preparing to make false returns in Louisiana and Florida, our friends request that the proposed celebration and serenades this evening be postponed." The New Haven Register is very joyous, quite the opposite of its Hartford coadjutor, and has no more doubt of the election of Tilden than of its own existence.

TILDEN DOES NOT MAKE A SPEECH.

Gov. Tilden was waited upon at his house in Gramercy Park at 10:30 o'clock last night by a crowd of about three hundred men and boys. They came from the vicinity of the Fifth Avenue Hotel, their "send-off" being a bulletin to the effect that Florida and Louisiana had both gone Democratic. In response to their cheers, Gov. Tilden came out upon the stoop of his house and said that he thanked those present for their patriotic support. He would not indulge in a speech, but would bid all good night. He bowed in acknowledgment of the cheers that followed this brief address, and then retired.

AFFAIRS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 9.—A dispatch from Victoria, V. I., says Mrs. Trutch, mother of ex-Gov. Trutch, died on Tuesday night last. A deputation from the Carnarvon Club waited on Premier Elliott yesterday with reference to the sentiments expressed by Lieut. Gov. Richards in regard to railway matters in his reply to an address from the citizens of Yale a few weeks ago. The Premier informed the deputation that the Government had not seen the reply until it was published, and did not indorse the Governor's views. The deputation expressed their confidence in the present Government, believing that the interests of the Province are safe in their hands.

FAILURE IN WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—Mr. Alexander R. Shepherd to-night called together a number of his personal friends and creditors, and stated to them that he was financially embarrassed, and submitted to them a statement of assets and liabilities which showed an excess of assets of upward of $600,000. A committee of five was appointed to examine into the details, and in a few days a meeting of his creditors will be called to hear the report of the committee. The feeling manifested at the meeting was in favor of providing such assistance as will deliver him from his temporary embarrassment.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

On Wednesday a fire destroyed the Hale House at Hot Springs, Ark., and the banking-house of Sumpter & Smith. Soon after another fire destroyed the banking-house of S. P. Young & Co., and the office of Morgan, United States Receiver. The loss is estimated at $35,000; insurance not stated.

A fire in the Pittman Manufacturing Company's mill at Laconia, N. H., on Wednesday night, caused a loss of $3,000.

POLICY AND COURSE OF GREAT BRITAIN—LORD BEACONSFIELD'S SPEECH AT THE BANQUET OF THE LORD MAYOR OF LONDON—THE MONTENEGRINS AND THE ARMISTICE.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—Sir Thomas White was to-day installed as Lord Mayor of London with the usual ceremonies. A grand banquet was given by the new Lord Mayor to-night at the Mansion House. Among the distinguished persons present was the Earl of Beaconsfield. In response to the toast to her Majesty's Ministers, Lord Beaconsfield made an elaborate speech, in which he explained the efforts the Government had made for the maintenance of peace during the past year. He said in these efforts the Government had been guided by the principle of maintaining the independence and territorial integrity of the Ottoman Empire which were guaranteed by the Treaty of Paris. He upheld this principle as best adapted to secure the peace of the world. He emphatically repudiated the doctrine that the Treaty of Paris ought to be considered obsolete. He recapitulated the events of the last year, and stated that the Government had refused its assent to the Berlin memorandum, and also refused to give its sanction to the proposals contained in the Soumarakoff letter, because it felt that the occupation of Turkish territory would be a violation of the most solemn treaties. The sending of the fleet to Besika Bay insured the tranquillity of Constantinople, and showed that the interests of England were not to be trifled with.

He continued: "Trying as events have been during the past year, the independence and integrity of Turkey have not been violated, and general peace has been upheld. So much for the great purposes which the Government proposed to itself. Another leading object of the Government's policy has been to secure such improvement in the condition of the subjects of Turkey as would remove all cause for disturbances, whether produced by absolute suffering or partly fostered by selfish agitators." Reviewing the Government's efforts in this direction, Lord Beaconsfield spoke of his hopefulness in the prospects of peace when Servia first showed signs of exhaustion and appealed to the good offices of England to procure an armistice. He testified to the cordiality and readiness with which Russia acceded to the proposal made by England on that occasion. His hopes then existing were, however, frustrated by the outburst of feeling in England, which persuaded not only the Servians, but the friends of the Servians in other countries, that England had suddenly determined to abandon her traditional policy. With regard to the last proposal for an armistice, as England had proposed a month as the minimum of armistice and as Russia had herself proposed three months, the English Government considered the Porte had completely and adequately met its proposal by granting five months, and, therefore, withdrew from the negotiation when the Porte's offer was refused, but was greatly gratified that an armistice had been at last obtained. He considered the Russian ultimatum unnecessary. Immediately the armistice was agreed to the English Government proposed a conference. He thought this conference should not merely consist of the Ambassadors at Constantinople, but should be participated in by statesmen who would be likely to have broader and less local views.

Lord Beaconsfield concluded with the following words: "I think I am correct in saying that all the powers have now agreed to attend the conference. The Marquis of Salisbury will doubtless do his best for the permanent peace of Europe, which all statesmen are agreed can be best secured by adhering to existing treaties. He knows that the independence and integrity of Turkey will vanish unless the people are placed under a Government which studies their welfare. I am hopeful that in the present temper of Europe we shall be able to accomplish these results without those terrible appeals to war of which we have heard so much. We have nothing to gain by war. We covet no cities or provinces. Our proudest boast is that the British Empire subsists as much upon sympathy as force. But if a struggle should come, it must be remembered that there is no country so prepared for war as England, because there is none whose resources are so great in a righteous cause; and I trust England will never embark in war except in such a cause—a cause which concerns her liberty or empire. England is not a country which will have to inquire whether she shall enter into a second or third campaign. If she commences, she will not finish until right is done."

PARIS, Nov. 9.—The Temps publishes a telegram from Vienna, which states that Montenegro, finding herself incapable of maintaining the troops in their present position during an armistice, has opened direct negotiations with the Porte for a prompt conclusion of peace.

TILDEN'S ASSUMED ELECTION STILL THE BASIS OF THE COMMENTS.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—The Pall Mall Gazette of this afternoon, commenting upon the Presidential election in the United States, says: "We think it is a craze or a calumny to assert that Mr. Tilden—so distinctly a representative of business men in the Eastern States—will extend any favor to the crude projects of the inflationists or to the unintelligent dishonesty of the repudiationists."

AMUSEMENTS.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

"The Shaughraun" was reproduced at Wallack's Theatre, last evening, in presence of an audience that filled the house. Mr. Boucicault's drama has been so long before the public that anything in shape of an account of its principal incidents would be of slight interest. The old-time familiarity of the playgoer with the drama has not, however, rendered its scenes less interesting or amusing, and a record of this fact is the single remark suggested by the revival of the work. The success of "The Shaughran" is easily understood. No one is more thoroughly au fait of the actor's art than Mr. Boucicault and, while he is uncommonly skillful in the construction of his pieces, he is particularly happy in enriching his dramatic stories with ad captandum situations and stage business which may not be exactly new, but which are always effective. "The Shaughraun" is a model play in respect of these qualities, and dullness does not prevail during one minute of its progress. That its occasional pathos and its unflagging vivacity and humor lose nothing at the hands of the artists now engaged in its representation at Wallack's need scarcely be reaffirmed. Mr. Boucicault, as Con, still commingles mischief and earnestness in such nice proportions as to make known a wonderfully amusing, if not an absolutely realistic, Irish peasant, and he bears off the largest share of the honors of the performance with as easy a grace as he does the laurels of authorship. Mr. Gilbert continues to dignify the character of Father Dolan, and Mr. Montague's ever-welcome nonchalance invests Capt. Molineaux, as of yore, with the desirable tinge of romance. The remaining rôles are assigned, with two or three exceptions, to the performers who assumed them from the first. Thus Mr. Arnott personates Corry Kinchela; Mr. Beckett, Harvey Duff; Miss Dyas, Claire, and Mme. Ponisi Mrs. O'Kelly. Robert Ffolliot now falls to the lot of Mr. Stephenson, who does all that can be done with the personage; Miss Rose Wood portrays Arte O'Neale with an earnestness which now and then verges upon staginess, and Miss Josephine Baker is a comely Moya. The scenery in "The Shaughraun," it is only necessary to add, is of exceptional beauty, and, in a word, every detail of the stage-attire of the drama is in keeping with its manifold requirements. Last night, the artists were called before the curtain after each act, and, at the termination of the piece, Mr. Boucicault, in deference to long-continued applause, made a brief speech. He said:

I wish I could tell you how thankful I am to find myself once more among you, and for this kind reception you have favored me with, this evening. If I could easily express what I feel I should be ungrateful. Yet if I were silent it might seem ungenerous on my part. You have heard so many long speeches, lately, that you must be glad to hear a brief one now. You know there are three things necessary to constitute a good theatrical entertainment. First, there must be an author to write a piece; secondly, there must be a good company to act it; and, thirdly, there must be—and this is the most important—an audience capable of appreciating it. I have never had the good fortune to have my piece played by a more admirable company than that of Wallack's Theatre, nor enjoyed the advantage of so generous a public as that of New-York, and, if permitted, I shall only be too happy to pass in your midst the rest of my artistic life.

THE FEMALE PEDESTRIANS.

The female pedestrians, Misses Mary Marshall and Bertha Von Hillern, yesterday completed the fourth day of their six days' contest for the prize purse of $1,000 and the championship, at Central Park Garden. Considerable interest is being manifested in the match, the spectators in attendance being quite numerous. A number of ladies were present last evening, and watched the pedestrians from private boxes. Miss Von Hillern started her first mile at 12h., 13m., 45s., Miss Marshall following at 12h., 16m., 5s. The former was attired in a short yellow frock and blue jacket, with a jaunting Derby hat, and carried a short riding-whip in her hand. Miss Marshall was dressed in sombre brown and also wore a Derby hat, but carried no whip. While Miss Von Hillern was fresh and in good condition, Miss Marshall exhibited unmistakable signs of weakness. She also suffers very much from lameness, and at one time during the afternoon, on the forty-eighth mile, was obliged to retire from the track and rest for over three hours before resuming her journey. Miss Von Hillern steadily gained on her opponent, and at 10 o'clock last night was twelve miles ahead. Her intervals of rests were less frequent than those of Miss Marshall, and at one time, after walking ten miles and resting for half an hour, she resumed the track and walked nineteen miles without any apparent difficulty or indication of fatigue. Up to 10 o'clock Miss Von Hillern had walked sixty-five miles to Miss Marshall's fifty-three miles, leaving the total number of miles walked during the four days 221 to Miss Marshall's 213. When Miss Marshall retired at 10:30 o'clock it seemed evident that unless her condition greatly improved she can scarcely hope to win the contest. Indeed, there were doubts expressed of her power to continue the effort until Saturday, the day upon which the match will end.

THE GERMAN RAILWAY KING

BANISHED FROM RUSSIA FOR BRIBERY.

THE GREAT TRIAL AT MOSCOW—DR. STROUSBERG'S ADDRESS TO THE COURT—A SENTENCE OF PERPETUAL BANISHMENT.

Dr. Strousberg, the German railway king, has recently undergone his trial at Moscow for offenses against the Russian commercial laws involved in his transactions with a certain financial association in Moscow called the Commercial Loan Bank. It was laid to his charge that he secured advances from the bank on terms unduly favorable to himself by bribing some of its chief officials. The jury found Dr. Strousberg and M. M. Handen, Poljanski, and Soumacher guilty. The other accused parties were acquitted. Sentence will be pronounced to-day. The number of persons accused was very great. Seventeen members of the Council of the Bank were charged with having presented a fictitious report for the years 1873 and 1874. Two of the Directors were accused of having accepted bribes from Strousberg to advance him some 7,000,000 roubles without sufficient security, and of having presented to the shareholders and published in the newspapers a false balance-sheet up to Oct. 1, 1875, and fifteen members of the council were charged with having, either by negligence or connivance, facilitated these and other nefarious transactions. A dispatch from London dated the 7th inst. stated that the doctor had been sentenced to perpetual banishment from Russia. The following is a summary of his address to the Court at Moscow:

"Up to 1874 I did not know the name even of the Moscow Commercial Loan Bank. In that year M. Manczyk, the partner of a Berlin banking firm, went to St. Petersburg to cash a bill of mine. On his return he told me that while at St. Petersburg he had renewed his acquaintance with M. Landau, a Director of the Moscow Commercial Loan Bank, who was anxious to extend his business. Before describing my transactions with the bank, I beg to be allowed to say a few words upon the manner in which this subject has been treated by the Public Prosecutor. I am a stranger here, unacquainted with the institutions and habits of the country; but from what I have seen in my own land, and in other countries, it seems to me that the Public Prosecutor, conscientiously to fulfill the duties of his office, should have included in his statement not only what he thinks is against me, but also what is in my favor. To blacken my name and reputation, the Public Prosecutor has gone so far as to represent the mere fact of my requiring large sums of money as proof that something was amiss. If I wanted much money it was because I had a large and prosperous business for which my capital, great as it was, did not suffice; and if it is alleged that I had no credit, a glance at my ledgers will show that many of the greatest firms in the iron and engine manufacturing line were in regular and mutually profitable connection with me. It is true, certain Berlin bankers have always been against me. You are probably aware that when no railways had been constructed in Germany for years, because the public could not be induced to invest under the arrangements and usages of those days, I laid down hundreds of miles of rail, and floated shares to the amount of hundreds of millions. I did this at my personal risk, and without any assistance on the part of bankers. I incurred thereby the hatred of those whose help I did not need at that time, and who were only too happy to make me smart for it at a later period, when the rapid growth of my iron works, the establishment of locomotive and railway carriage manufactories, and other concerns consumed more capital than I had immediately at command. To give an idea of the business I was doing, and the property I owned, I need only say that my Bohemian estates contained a full third of the immense mineral wealth of that country. I have created this business in the midst of difficulties brought on by two successive wars; and if the third war—that of 1870—did me serious harm, this, I believe, is no argument against me particularly. Many others suffered while I managed to keep my head above water. As was eventually proved by the official administrators of my Austrian business, I should have recovered lost ground and founded the greatest iron works and manufactories in existence had I been able to complete my Bohemian enterprise, instead of being snatched away from my business and detained at Moscow. Well, in 1874, I wanted money for the purposes mentioned, and as my books proved me to have owned ten million roubles at the time, it cannot with truth be said that I had no stake in my business. Nor has it ever been doubted by any one that every penny borrowed, in addition to my own capital, went to the works, to complete which I strained every nerve. If I borrowed much, it was not to make a private purse, but to form and perfect a concern the profitable character of which has been recognized by persons in authority. I was, moreover, responsible for what I borrowed, and had much to lose of my own. The Public Prosecutor, if he chooses, may call me rash, imprudent, and thoughtless, but he has no right to doubt my integrity just because I was doing business on a large scale. Nor is it very likely that he, or certain commercial gentlemen in a small way whom he has consulted, should be able to form an adequate idea of the lucrativeness of enterprises such as I was engaged in. I received large advances from the Moscow Commercial Loan Bank, for which I gave bills and pledged mortgages, shares, and bills of lading. The bank eventually became bankrupt when I happened to be at Moscow to negotiate for a further loan. Though I had fulfilled my obligations to the bank up to that date—though no bills of mine in the possession of the bank were due at the time of the bank stopping payment—still, when the bank did stop payment, I was arrested on the pretext of being a borrower to a large amount. Unacquainted with the Russian laws as I am, it was evident to me from the first that no civil or criminal case could be based upon such a pretext. If to borrow is a crime, no foreign merchant can afford to buy anything in Russia. After I had been detained in prison for some time, for no better reason than the one stated, the Public Prosecutor preferred another charge against me. I was accused of bribing the Directors of the bank to lend me money, which, had they had the bank's interest at heart, they would have refused. All I can say in reply is that the few trifling presents I made to two Directors were made not before, but after I received advances, and that in doing this I certainly had no idea that I was transgressing the law of the land. No one can deny that fees are habitually given and received in Russia. When I was in St. Petersburg in 1874 I noticed that contractors were in the habit of feeing right and left, and that the money paid in this way was always accepted. M. Meck, to my knowledge, could not obtain a certain concession until he had paid 1,500,000 roubles down. If other moral standards have since been introduced into Russia, I am glad to hear it; but I cannot help regretting that I have been singled out as the only victim. As to the larger sum one Director received, I had nothing to do with the paying of it. The persons who put me in communication with M. Landau continued to act as intermediatories, and brought me the money from the bank, having previously deducted what they thought proper. They had me in their power for the moment, and did what they liked with me; but though I consented to be robbed, I treated them as lacqueys, and would never condescend to bargain with them." These persons, Dr. Strousberg continued, were no doubt on an intimate footing with M. Landau. But how much they gave M. Landau, and how much they kept for themselves, he was unable to say. A special reproach was made against him by the Public Prosecutor for not having the 2,000 railway carriages ready when the money was advanced upon them. But the bank were perfectly satisfied with the transaction, having sent persons to inspect his works and convince themselves that the carriages were in hand. If the carriages had been finished at the time would he have been satisfied with the stipulated advance of 900 roubles apiece? And was it not just because the carriages were not ready that he deposited a quantity of Paris Narbonne shares, in addition to pawning the carriages?

Dr. Strousberg's speech was delivered in German and translated into Russian, sentence for sentence, by the interpreter. The speech took three hours to deliver in this way.

THE ALBANY CONGRESSMAN.

Col. Terence J. Quinn, Democratic Congressman elect from the Sixteenth District, was serenaded at his home in Albany Wednesday night, and in acknowledgment said:

GENTLEMEN AND COMRADES OF THE JACKSON CORPS: I thank you for the compliment given me this evening. Unexpected as it is, I thank you for it. Gentlemen, I am not a speechmaker. It has been heralded throughout the country, and the County of Albany especially, of late, that I could not make a speech. Well, I don't believe I can; still, gentlemen, I can return to you sincere thanks, one and all, to my friends who have stood by me in this most exciting campaign. It was one of the hardest fought battles I have ever been in. I had to cope with one of Albany's proudest men; a man of great ability; a man standing high in the city, and even in the State Legislature. I think it a great victory when an humble man like myself can compete with my neighbor and friend, Hon. Hamilton Harris, and be victorious over him. Gentlemen, when I say that I have beaten him with the votes of the people I must stand very high in your estimation. You have elected me to a high and an honorable position, and it shall be my duty, at all times, to see to the interests of the city and county, of Albany—at whatever hour of the day or night, whenever called upon, to see that the wants of the people are attended to. (A voice, "Yes, Terry Quinn will do that.") If I do not succeed, it will not be my fault. I will do my best to please all, irrespective of party: and I hope, gentlemen, that when my term has expired, that one and all of you will be able to say that I have done my duty, which I shall try to do. Gentlemen: I again thank you kindly, and bid you good night.

A BAD OUTLOOK.

The Troy Whig of Thursday says: "The news of the probability of Tilden's election had the most depressing effect upon our manufacturers and business men generally. At the Albany and Rensselaer Stee Works the usual two weeks' notice was posted informing their monthly employes that the works would close Dec. 1 for an indefinite period. All day laborers are to be discharged on Friday of this week. Intelligence has also been received that a number of our stove manufacturers contemplate closing their works next week in the event of Tilden's election being confirmed. About three hundred men will thus be thrown out of employment at the steel works alone."

MR. LINCOLN'S TOMB.

THE DASTARDLY ATTEMPT TO DESPOIL IT—THE ROBBERS INTERRUPTED BY ACCIDENT.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Nov. 7.—An attempt was made this evening to perpetrate one of the most infamous outrages which the mind of man can conceive of—that of stealing the bones and ashes of Abraham Lincoln. Unfortunately the perpetrators escaped, leaving, however, the evidences of their crime behind them, and though the clues are next to nothing, if human ingenuity can track them it will be done. Somehow or other—no one exactly knows how—J. C. Power, the custodian of the Lincoln monument, became impressed with the idea that there were designs upon the remains, and he communicated his suspicions to Leonard Swett and Robert Lincoln. They could hardly believe that any one, even the meanest and lowest scoundrel in the land, could conceive such a thing. However, they concluded to adopt precautions, even should there be nothing in the feeling. Accordingly, Mr. Swett wrote Col. Stewart of this city, about two weeks ago, requesting him to station a guard at the monument. This was done, but no one came to disturb the corpse. Detective Tyrrell, of the United States Secret Service, whose head-quarters are in Chicago, having business here, was requested by Swett and Lincoln to see Mr. Power, and to look around town for suspicious characters. He arrived here three or four days ago, and commenced a vigorous shadowing of several of the small hotels, but he saw no one whom he recognized. This afternoon Mr. Power came into town in a hurry and hunted up Tyrrell and informed him that two very hard-looking cases had been out to the cemetery looking around; and he felt assured that they were there for no good purpose. One registered as from Racine, and the other from Kenosha, Wis. Their names are suppressed, since they have had nothing to do with what occurred later. An effort will, of course, be made to find out who they are. Mr. Power, not being used to detective work, could give but meager descriptions of them. The result of the interview with Tyrrell is unknown, but he must have concluded that election night was an excellent one in which to rob the tomb.

This evening's train brought from Chicago ex-Chief of the Secret Service Elmer Washburn, who, it seems, had been requested by Messrs. Swett and Lincoln to come here and aid Tyrrell. About 6:30 Washburn, Tyrrell, and three other men went out to Oakwood and concealed themselve in Memorial Hall, inside the monument, to await developments. One man was posted in the labyrinth in the rear, so called because of the walls running in different directions and making numerous passage ways, these walls supporting the terrace. His object was to hear the noise made in the vault, if any were made. After patiently waiting for nearly three hours, and when about tired out from standing still, the utmost silence being imperative, he heard a grating noise, which lasted perhaps five minutes. Then, in a little while, came several successive thuds, as if some one was hammering. The time having arrived for action, Washburn and his men slipped out of the door, with cocked revolvers in their hands, determined to shoot to kill if any resistance was made. Just as they were turning the corner to the left one of the men accidentally exploded his revolver. The noise was very loud, so still were the surroundings, and though there were but about 120 feet to go over, when the officers got to the door of the vault the dastardly villains were gone. They must have had some one watching to give them the signal of danger or else had come outside for a breath of fresh air and heard the snapping of the cap and ran into the woods which surrounded the monument. It is but a short distance, and a man could get within shelter and be unobservable in a quarter of a minute. The men at once scattered, and went in the direction the thieves had gone, and, while dodging behind the trees, two of them exchanged shots, each mistaking the other for one of the fugitives. After shooting at each other they cried "Wash," "Wash," indicative of a friend in such an emergency, and then they found out their mistake. The bullets whizzed close to both, and it was miraculous that they escaped injury.

No traces of the thieves being discovered, the party returned to the catacomb. The body is inclosed in a lead casket. This is surrounded by a cedar case, and the receptacle of these is a marble sarcophagus. The latter had a double lid, the upper one not being as large as the other. Both had been pried off with a chisel or an ax, and somewhat chipped in the operation. The under lid was laid crosswise on the casket, the head-piece on the floor, and the upper lid standing against the wall. The casket itself was pulled out about a foot from the body of the sarcophagus, and a small piece had been taken off on the floor, where an ax with the edge full of marble-dust, an ordinary chisel, and a pair of nippers were. The other tools had evidently been taken away since the lock on the iron-grated door had been sawed off. It should be stated that the sarcophagus was in the catacomb and not in the crypt, being thus placed in order that visitors might see it. The damage done is comparatively little.

Only one motive can be attributed to these despoilers of the grave, and that is the hope of a reward for the restoration of the remains. If they had succeeded in carrying them off, it certainly could not have been their intention to take away the casket, for it must weigh from five hundred to six hundred pounds, and half a dozen men could not have carried it to the fence for transfer to a wagon in the road. It is more than likely that they intended to cut open the casket, and gather up the bones and dust of the martyred President and carry them away.

THE GEORGIA COTTON CROP.

REPORTS TO THE AUGUSTA COTTON EXCHANGE FROM NINETEEN COUNTIES.

AUGUSTA, Nov. 9.—The Augusta Cotton Exchange has reports for October as to the prospects and condition of the crop, based upon thirty-four replies from nineteen counties. The average date of the replies is the 30th day of October. The weather, since the 1st of October, is generally reported favorable for opening fruit and picking. The weather is more favorable than that of last year for gathering the crop. There were slight frosts from the 2d to the 5th of October, and killing frosts from the 16th to the 18th, which caused some injury on the low and bottom lands to late cotton; but owing to the advanced condition of the crops the damage is immaterial. Seventy-five per cent. of the crop reported is already gathered, and it is expected the picking will be completed between the 15th and 30th of November. Unusual divergence of opinion exists as to the probable yield, the estimates varying from an excess of twenty per cent. to a decrease of twenty per cent. on that of last year. The September storms wasted a small percentage of the yield, and injured a quantity as to grade, there being a good deal of sandy and discolored cotton. The staple of all is superior. The crop has matured and is being gathered and marketed with a rapidity seldom it ever equaled. It is the opinion of the Committee on Crops that this section is harvesting more cotton than last year by from ten to fifteen per cent.

SHAKESPEARE MAKES the magician Prospero moralize over the vanishing splendors and enchantments of life. It is only too often that we are compelled to dwell on the seeming evanescence of good and the permanence of evil. This is noticeably so in the cheats of commerce, scented soaps for instance. B. T. BABBITT'S BABY SOAP aims at a reform, for it is delicate, unscented with pungent odors, and the highest delight for the toilet and bath-room. "BIBLIOTHECA" EXTRAORDINARY! MR. MENZIES' LIBRARY.

An unparalleled collection of rare, choice, and unique books.

From the Evening Post, Nov. 7.

"For the better part of half a century the bibliopoles of America and Europe have known Mr. William Menzies as one of the most insatiable and fastidious book collectors in the country. During forty years he has been buying and culling books, having owned in that period the material of many libraries. He has rejected all copies of books that were not in faultless condition. It has been his constant habit to retain a fine copy only until he could get a finer one; money has been no object with him in securing the best specimens; his library, embracing now 4,400 volumes, is a survival of the fittest. To his special taste as a lover of letters he has added the skill of an expert in fine illustrative prints; in restoring, mounting, and inlaying the missing parts of scarce books, and in clothing the results of his selection with sumptuous and appropriate bindings. His library, soon to be sold at Clinton Hall, is therefore one of the most remarkable ones ever seen in America."

The whole to be sold by auction, commencing Nov. 13, at 3:30 and 7:30 o'clock P. M. each day.

Now on examination at Clinton Hall. Admission by card only.

Parties wishing to purchase elegant editions for their libraries may rely upon it that no such collection of books has ever before been offered for sale by auction or otherwise.

ELECTION EXCITEMENT.

GREAT ANXIETY OVER THE RESULT.

PRINTING-HOUSE SQUARE PACKED WITH A MULTITUDE OF PEOPLE—CROWDS PERUSING THE VARIOUS BULLETIN-BOARDS—THE REASSURING NEWS OF VICTORY FOR HAYES GREETED WITH GREAT ENTHUSIASM—THE DEMOCRATS TRYING TO KEEP UP THEIR DROOPING SPIRITS.

The intense excitement over the election which was exhibited on Tuesday and Wednesday was continued yesterday and last night in an unabated degree. It was displayed in all parts of the City, but the focal points were the neighborhoods where bulletins were posted, the largest throng being gathered in Printing-house square, near THE TIMES office. The sidewalks, at times during the day and evening, were almost impassable. The vast crowds were orderly in their conduct, and the majority seemed to be in a serious mood, evincing a desire to have all doubts on the subject removed. Reassuring bulletins at THE TIMES building, announcing that victory was certain, elicited repeated and long-continued shouts, which soon drew a crowd that filled all the space around the Franklin statue and spread into the east side of City Hall Park. Contradictory dispatches from Democratic sources which were bulletined at offices of like proclivities, added to the excitement and had the effect of keeping alive the wavering hopes of the great multitude. The rousing cheers in front of THE TIMES bulletins were echoed, more or less faintly, from the neighborhoods of the Sun and World. The space between the Herald office and Astor House was also taken possession of during the afternoon by an animated mass, sometimes impeding the passage of vehicles through that part of Broadway, and occasionally completely blocking the sidewalks. Stray "Centennial visitors" must have been forcibly reminded, as far as the jam was concerned, of some of their experiences in the City of Brotherly Love. Through these crowds of excited men it was an undertaking of some difficulty for a lady to make her way; but those compelled to attempt it were fortunately enabled, rather slowly it is true, to achieve their purpose without serious injury. To add to the distraction, the ubiquitous newsboy was nearly all that adjective implies, and the "extry" with "full 'count of the 'lecshin" was obtainable anywhere on the island for a few pennies. In the morning, announcements were made through Democratic journals, that Florida and South Carolina were claimed by Tilden, the effect of which, when recorded on the bulletin boards, was to revive the drooping spirits of the "reformers" and enable them to get up a semblance of a cheer. It was not so lustily given, however, as that which they prematurely gave on Tuesday night when they thought they were in the fresh flush of victory. Their depression was easily explained by those better posted by the bulletin placed on the TIMES office. This was to the effect that Gov. Stearns had telegraphed that Florida had surely gone Republican. After the cooling of the excitement which followed this piece of news, there was a comparative degree of quiet. This, however, was not to be of long duration. As the day wore on the crowds became denser, and it is to be favorably commented upon that no quarrels have been the result of the long and intense excitement. The dispatch which created the greatest surprise and brought forth round after round of applause was the following, conspicuously placed over the entrance to THE TIMES counting-room: "North Carolina—Latest returns indicate Republican gains." As this good news was disseminated through the crowd the cheering for Hayes received a new impulse, and when an enthusiastic individual called for the regulation "three times three and a tiger," there was no mistaking of the fervor with which the response was given. The reception of this dispatch was so satisfactory that many who had waited, patiently or impatiently, all day, went away, having no doubt that the election was decided in favor of Hayes. A considerable crowd still lingered, however, until a late hour, and there was no perceptible abatement in the enthusiasm.

IN WALL AND BROAD STREETS.

INTENSE INTEREST MANIFESTED BY MERCHANTS AND BROKERS—A LARGE NUMBER OF WAGERS MADE ON THE RESULT.

The interest evinced in the result of the election, yesterday, by the Wall and Broad street brokers, while it was manifested in the same quiet and undemonstrative manner as on the previous day, was very much more intense and universal. As on Wednesday, men congregated at various points in the street to discuss the situation, but it was quite apparent that the opinion of those who had been so positive in their assertions on that day had been somewhat shaken by the conflicting character of the telegraphic dispatches. Where they had been willing to wager at heavy odds on the certainty of Tilden's election, they yesterday decreased the odds very materially. Still, it was apparent that the Democrats were confident of Tilden's success. On the other hand, it was just as apparent that a material change had taken place in the popular sentiment, and that there were many who felt confident of the accuracy of the reports of Hayes' election who had on the previous day been disposed to concede the victory to the Democrats. The business at the Stock Exchange was transacted pretty much the same as on Wednesday, but an increased interest in the political issue was clearly manifested in the number of wagers made during the day, and the very general discussion among the brokers at intervals of leisure.

At the Produce Exchange the political discussion occupied the attention of the members to such an extent that there was a practical suspension of the general business of the day. Every one, excepting only those whose business was so important as to claim all their attention and time, was to be seen conversing with his neighbor on the all-absorbing topic. These discussions were all of an amicable character, and indicated a general disposition on both sides to admit that positive assertions as to the success of either party were idle. There was considerable debate throughout the day relative to the payment of wagers, and a general disposition on the part of all who had staked money, to "hedge," or call things "square," by mutual consent.

The rapid sale of newspaper "extras" was, as on Wednesday, one of the features of the day, but it was a noticeable fact that the newsboys evinced a general desire to be more moderate in their charges than on the previous day, very rarely, if ever, demanding more than the regular price of the papers. The conflicting character of these extras was really amusing, and, taken in connection with the different telegraphic bulletins, served to increase the uncertainty which it is to be presumed they were intended to remove. Short bulletins, the reading of which was very difficult owing to the smallness of the lettering, were posted at frequent intervals in front of the Broad street entrance to the Gold Exchange, and were eagerly scanned by a crowd of anxious brokers. As was previously stated, however, they were merely surmises based upon "ifs," and offered little enlightenment upon the result in the doubtful States. Wherever the casual observer passed his ears caught the fragments of political discussion, and when, at last, the commercial potentates left their various places of business at the closing of the Exchanges, it was easily perceptible that the burden of their conversation related more to the political probabilities of the hour than to the business transactions of the day.

A NOVEL SALUTE FOR HAYES.

As showing how the excitement which has prevailed in New-York for the past few days has pervaded nearly every nook and corner of the City, the following incident may be related: While Prof. Chandler was delivering a lecture on chemistry to the students at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, yesterday afternoon, a report was received that Hayes was elected, and in honor of the occasion he performed the experiment of liberating hydrogen from water and firing a salute with the gas from a brass cannon. Some one requested him to repeat the experiment by firing a salute for Mr. Tilden, but the request was not complied with.

THE EXCITEMENT IN NEW-JERSEY.

The greatest excitement prevailed in all the cities of New-Jersey yesterday over the election, and large crowds were all day, till late at night, in front of the news centres, anxiously inquiring after results.

THE LOCAL TICKET IN SUFFOLK AND QUEEN'S COUNTIES.

The Republicans of Suffolk County have been successful with their County ticket, their average majority being about 300. O. B. Ackerly is re-elected County Clerk; George W. Cooper is elected Sheriff, and Moses R. Smith, member of Assembly.

In Queens County the Republicans had no candidate for County Clerk, and John H. Sutphin, the Democratic candidate, had no opposition. The other local offices—all Democratic—are as follows: Sheriff, Benjamin F. Rushmore; Coroners, William D. Wood, James McCarthy, John Carroll. The Democratic candidates for Assembly in both districts are also elected; in the First, Elbert Floyd Jones; in the Second, George E. Bulmer.

AT REPUBLICAN HEAD-QUARTERS.

THE FIFTH AVENUE HOTEL FILLED WITH ANXIOUS CROWDS—CHEERING NEWS RECEIVED FROM LOUISIANA AND OTHER STATES.

The Fifth Avenue Hotel and the open space in front of it were filled with eager crowds yesterday afternoon and evening, anxious to hear the good news which was constantly being received by the Republican National Committee. The State Central Committee, having got through with all its important business, gave up its rooms early in the evening. Messrs. Chandler and McCormick, the Chairman and Secretary of the National Committee were not present, the former having gone to Washington, and the latter to Philadelphia, and the business of the members of the committee who have remained in town was confined almost exclusively to the receiving of dispatches, the active campaign business of the committee having been completed. Among the dispatches received last evening was one from Gov. Kellogg, of Louisiana, that the returns from remote parishes were even more favorable than they had expected, and that there was no doubt about the Republicans having carried the State by a good majority. This was followed by another dispatch from him that there was a Republican gain of 6,000 in New-Orleans, and that the Republican majorities were larger all over the State and the Democratic majorities smaller than had been anticipated. Gov. Stearns, of Florida, sent the following telegram early in the evening:

"Last night the Tallahassee train for the western counties, which was expected to bring in the return from remote points in the interior, was Ku-kluxed and the train thrown from the track, which was torn up and blockaded in several places. This shows that Florida is believed to be for Hayes on an honest count."

Word was received that Oregon was all right, and would give Hayes at least 1,000 majority beyond all question. Mr. T. B. Keogh, Chairman of the Republican State Committee of North Carolina, telegraphed that returns from the western part of the State improved greatly the prospects that it had been carried by the Republicans.

The general tone of all the callers at the committee-rooms was not only cheerful but confident, no one expressing a doubt that full returns would conclusively show that Hayes had carried South Carolina, Louisiana, and Florida, and possibly North Carolina.

MAKING BOGUS DISPATCHES.

TILDEN'S BUREAU AT THE EVERETT HOUSE SENDING OUT FALSE REPORTS TO COVER UP HIS DEFEAT.

The Democrats, in their anxiety to account for the defeat of Tilden, have organized a "counting-out" telegraph bureau at the Everett House, and an imposing and highly sensational array of the concoctions of that outrage mill was furnished to the Tilden newspapers yesterday. An explanation of how the thing was managed will be interesting. Although hundreds of anxious Democrats thronged the Everett House, and besieged the doors of the head-quarters of the State and National Head-quarters, where they were informed important dispatches, placing the election of Mr. Tilden beyond all doubt, had been received, they were neither shown these dispatches nor allowed to even look within the sacred apartments. All doors were kept under lock and key, and none were admitted except the members of the committees and their intimate friends. Reporters from the Tilden papers were admitted to the first room, but representatives of Republican journals were not allowed to pass the threshold. The bogus dispatch manufacturers carried on their operations in an inner room, and sent out to the reporters slips of ordinary paper, purporting to be dispatches from Florida, South Carolina, and the other States, stating that a majority vote had been cast for Tilden, but that the Republican leaders in New-York had sent orders that he should be counted out at all hazards. On asking for the originals of these "dispatches," the reporters were informed they could not have them, and on inquiring the names of the senders were told that the information was not in possession of the attachés of the bureau. The manufacturers of the dispatches in question had even forgotten to date them until reminded by the reporters that that was an important feature. That these dispatches were manufactured in the mysterious inner room became all the more apparent from the fact that while they were not exhibited, and all information in relation to the senders was denied, reports of far less import were promptly filed and given to the press to copy. From the extraordinary mystery by which these terrible dispatches were surrounded, and the manner in which the process of manufacturing and issuing them was carried on, it was apparent to the representatives of the press that they were merely produced for the purpose of getting up a feasible explanation of the Democratic defeat. The dispatches were looked upon as unreliable even by Democrats, and it was stated that one of the reasons of their manufacture and publication was in order to influence the pools and enable those who had bet heavily on Tilden to get back some of their money.

Up to a late hour last night the Everett House was surrounded by a crowd of excited Democrats. Mr. Magone, the Chairman of the State Committee, stated to them at 11 o'clock that "Florida and Louisiana had certainly gone Democratic." He was cheered by the listeners, but they did not seem to be at all satisfied in regard to the accuracy of his statement, and went to their homes with grave apprehensions of the election of Hayes.

A HIGH RATE OF WORKING EXPENSES.

From the London Economist.

Capt. Tyler's speech to the Grand Trunk meeting on Thursday contains a remarkable account of the ruinous kind of business forced upon it, which is all but unprecedented, we should say, at any rate on so large a scale, in railway history. During the last half-year they had received £936,000, but this had been earned at a cost of £734,000, or seventy-eight per cent. The result was that the company had only £202,000 to pay its pre-preferences, whereas, if they had received the same rates for conveying their goods as in 1873, they would have earned £350,000 more, and been able to pay the preferences in full. Capt. Tyler allows that probably they might not have had so much traffic if the former rates had been maintained, but the falling off is so enormous as to make it evident that a higher rate would probably have been nearly as much more profitable as this estimate, for if the traffic had fallen off the working expenses would also have been diminished. It is quite certain that no capitalists would have consented beforehand to make railways anywhere with the prospect of working at such rates as the railway war has forced on the Canadian and some of the United States railways; and we can only hope, for the sake of the large capital already embarked, and also because it is not desirable that the business of old countries lending to new ones should be wholly stopped, that Capt. Tyler's not over-sanguine hopes of an agreement among the companies may be realized very soon. Traders in America probably derive some benefit from the excessively low rates, but the benefit is a doubtful one when the rates are so much below the paying point to the carrying companies as they now seem to be. Such rates cannot be depended upon to last, and the uncertainty makes them less beneficial to trade than a moderately low rate would be.

DEPRESSION OF TRADE IN RUSSIA.

From the London Economist.

The general depression of trade is evidently being felt in Russia with exceptional acuteness. According to the Official Gazette, the Customs receipts for the first nine months of this year have amounted to only £5,528,000, which is a diminution of £930,000, as compared with the same period in 1875, and £33,000 less than was raised in 1874. The Gazette gives no information as to the particular sources of revenue that have proved less fruitful, but the evidence of diminishing trade which the Customs receipts afford is borne out by the statistics of the foreign trade of the country for the first six months of this year, which have just been published by the Minister of Finance, and which show a very general falling off both in the imports and exports. Running over the chief articles of export, we find that while in the first half of 1875 there were exported 1,964,924 cwt. of wheat, the export during the first six months of the present year was only 1,542,014 cwt. Similarly the export of barley has sunk from 353,200 cwt. to 148,000 cwt.; of oats, from 1,228,342 cwt. to 852,153 cwt.; of flax, from 2,057,500 cwt. to 1,160,283 cwt.; of hemp, from 568,067 cwt. to 548,843 cwt.; and of seeds, from 1,348,426 cwt. to 514,112 cwt. Only in wood is there any noteworthy improvement, and of that the value has risen from £2,365,214 to £3,097,852. As regards the precious metals, also, the movements are decidedly adverse to Russia. She has sent out of the country during the first seven months of the year gold and silver to the value of £11,460,200, which is no less than £9,320,850 in excess of the amount exported in 1875, and an increase of £9,907,300 upon 1874. Her imports, on the other hand, have amounted to only £403,000, which is a decrease upon 1875 of £165,700, and of £687,500 upon 1874. And these movements show a drain of the precious metals which Russia, with her enormous depreciated paper currency, is little able to bear.

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

SHOOTING AFFRAY AMONG ROUGHS.

A MAN FATALLY WOUNDED IN A DISREPUTABLE DRINKING SALOON—THE PLACE LICENSED BY THE EXCISE COMMISSIONERS.

Tivoli Hall, a low drinking place at No. 263 West Seventeenth street, the resort, as claimed by the Police, of thieves and disreputable characters, was the scene yesterday of a desperate affray, during which Charles G. Bornham, alias "Rocks," the bar-tender in the place, was shot and fatally wounded. Tivoli Hall and the West Atlantic Garden, in West Thirtieth street, near the Twenty-ninth Precinct Station-house, are both known as the "Burnt Rag." The proprietor of both places is William Burns, who formerly kept a vile resort in the basement of No. 50 Bleecker street. This place was closed up after a number of raids had been made upon it by Capt. Allaire, of the Fourteenth Precinct. Burns then established the "Burnt Rag" in West Thirtieth street, and more recently opened Tivoli Hall in West Seventeenth street. Capt. Tynan, of the Sixteenth Precinct, endeavored, by representing to the Excise Commissioners the nature of the persons who resorted to the place, to prevent a license being issued to the proprietor, but his representations were not heeded by the Commissioners, and a liquor license was granted.

Shortly before 9 o'clock yesterday morning Bornham and a strange woman were in a room in the rear of the bar. Two men, one of whom is supposed to be James McGuire, were in the barroom. It is stated that Bornham attempted to commit an outrage on the woman, and her screams attracted the attention of the men, who rushed into the back room. A fracas occurred, during which a pistol shot was fired. Bornham was shot in the left side, and fell bleeding to the floor. The two men rushed out of the place and escaped, leaving Bornham and the woman in the place. The woman's screams attracted a crowd to the spot, and a policeman soon arrived. Bornham was placed on a stretcher and carried to the West Twentieth street Police-station. Police Surgeon McLeod was called to attend him, and finding that he was dangerously wounded, ordered his immediate removal to Bellevue Hospital. While at the station-house Bornham stated that he had been shot by John McGuire, alias "Mug," a notorious rough, but refused to state under what circumstances the shooting had taken place. A general alarm was sent out to the Police, calling for the arrest of McGuire, and the suspected man was soon after arrested by Patrolman Cain, of the Sixteenth Precinct, as he was leaving his house, No. 349 Ninth avenue. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where he was confronted with the wounded man, who, however, failed to identify him as the man who shot him, and he was accordingly discharged. With singular stupidity the Police failed to detain the woman who was in the place when the shooting occurred. She remained in the place until it was closed up by a barber living next door, to whom she remarked when leaving, that she thought the shot was intended for her. It is believed that the shot was fired by James McGuire, a brother of "Mug" McGuire, and the Police are looking for him and for the woman who was present at the occurrence.

THE COMMON COUNCIL.

The Board of Aldermen yesterday took up the communication of Mayor Wickham vetoing the resolution allowing the Trustees of St. Patrick's Cathedral to make sewer connections with the edifice free of cost. In his veto the Mayor stated that if the privilege were granted it would establish a precedent by which other churches and institutions could claim like favors from the City, and that the right to make sewer connections had always been paid for at the regular rates. The amount involved in granting the proposed privilege to the Cathedral was about $700.

Alderman McCarthy said that the fee for making one sewer connection was $10, the connection representing one lot. It was proposed to make only one sewer connection with the Cathedral, and yet for that one sewer the Trustees might be called upon to pay $10 for every lot covered by the edifice if the resolution were not passed. Alderman Purroy then quoted from the minutes of the board a number of resolutions granting similar privileges to St. Joseph's Asylum and other institutions, which he said were approved by the Mayor. The resolution was then adopted.

Mayor Wickham also sent in a veto of a resolution providing for sprinkling Fifth avenue from Washington square to Fifty-ninth street, and Broadway from Bowling green to Fifty-ninth street. The Mayor says that his objections to the measure are based on the scarcity of Croton water.

Alderman Gross offered a resolution providing for the appointment of a special committee of five to investigate the causes of the present scarcity of Croton water, and to report means of preventing such scarcity in times of long drought. On motion of Alderman Billings, the matter was referred to the Committee on Arts and Sciences.

A resolution was adopted directing the Clerk of the Common Council to execute a lease of the premises on the south-west corner of Seventh avenue and Twenty-second street, for the use of the Eighth District Civil Court, for five years from May 1, 1877, at $3,000 per annum.

The estimates for 1877 were then called up and laid over.

AN ADROIT ROBBERY.

On Wednesday evening about 6:30 o'clock, a man about thirty years of age entered the jewelry store of Richard Keeping, No. 1,601 Broadway, and requested Mr. Keeping to call at once at No. 230 West 47th street to see a Mrs. Stuyvesant, who desired to purchase some jewelry, and who was too ill to leave the house. Mr. Keeping went to the place indicated, leaving the store in charge of his wife. A few minutes after he left, two strange men entered the store and asked for him. Mrs. Keeping told them that her husband was out, but would return in a short time, and the men said that they would wait for him. One of them asked for a glass of water, and Mrs Keeping went into the kitchen in the rear of the store to get some. The man who had asked her for the water followed her and engaged her in conversation for a few minutes, standing before her in such a manner that she could not see the interior of the store. When she returned to the store the man who had been left there had disappeared, and in a few moments his companion went out, remarking that he would return when Mr. Keeping was in. When Mr. Keeping arrived at No. 230 West Forty-seventh street he discovered that the premises were occupied as a private stable, and that no person resided there. Becoming alarmed, he hurried back to his store, and there learned of the visit of the strange men. On looking through his stock he found that seven gold and five silver watches, valued at $450, had been stolen. Capt. Ward, of the Twenty-second Precinct, was yesterday informed of the robbery, and, with Detective Cottrell, is searching for the thieves.

CHORAL MUSIC AT TRINITY CHAPEL.

The choirs of Trinity parish held their fourth annual rehearsal at Trinity Chapel, in West Twenty-fifth street, last evening. There were about two hundred members of the chorus in the chancel, and the body of the chapel was well filled with ladies and gentlemen. The several choirs present were Trinity Church choir, A. H. Messiter, director; St. Paul's, J. H. Cornell, director, and the choirs of St. John's and Trinity Chapels, under the direction of Messrs. G. F. Le Jenne and W. B. Gilbert respectively. The programme opened with a processional hymn entitled "Forward! Be Our Watchword," during the rendition of which the choir marched down the central aisle and returned to the chancel. Evening prayer followed, the service being conducted by Rev. Dr. Swope. The responses were chorally rendered by the choir. At the conclusion of this service Rev. Morgan Dix, D. D., delivered an address, giving a brief outline of the origin and history of choral music. After narrating the primitive style of choral music, he stated that a school of music was started in the year 1838 for the instruction of the younger members of Trinity Parish in vocal music and the style of choral music now in use in that parish. The funds for conducting this enterprise were furnished by the parent society, and the first appropriation for the purpose was $1,000, which was devoted to the congregation of St. John's Chapel in Varick street. The success of the enterprise was conclusive after one year's trial, and the result had been a more elevated character of sacred music than could otherwise have been attained. Right Rev. Bishop Nealy, of the diocese of Main, occupied a seat in the chancel.

THE GARDEN CITY WATER WORKS.

By invitation of Mr. Henry Hilton and Mrs. A. T. Stewart, a large party of ladies visited Garden City yesterday, by special train, to witness a public trial of the new water works and to inspect the city on which so much money has been spent, with the view of making it, from a sanitary point of view, one of the most attractive places of resort in the State. The remarkably complete system of drainage has been finished for some time, and now there has been added a system of water supply which will amply meet all demands, even should the city increase ten-fold. The water works are situated about a quarter of a mile from the railroad station, in a low meadow at the rear of the Stewart Hotel. The special train arrived at Garden City about 11 A. M., and the visitors proceeded to inspect the works. The engine was put in operation, and the process of pumping the water from the great reservoir shown. An exhibition of the effectiveness of the system in case of fire followed, and gave great satisfaction. A number of the visitors afterward visited the memorial church which is being erected by Mrs. Stewart, in memory of her husband, at a cost of $350,000. By invitation of Mrs. Stewart, the visitors lunched afterward at the Stewart Hotel, and returned to New-York in the afternoon.

WAS IT THE FRANKLIN?

A LARGE STEAMER SEEN OFF CAPE SABLE IN A GALE—HER APPEARANCE SIMILAR TO THAT OF THE FRANKLIN.

The German bark Norma, Capt. Herman Bernecker, which left Glasgow on Sept. 20, passed Quarantine about noon yesterday, and anchored off the first landing, Staten Island, at 1 o'clock. Capt. Bernecker, having been questioned as to whether he had seen any vessel answering the description of the Franklin, which is hourly expected, with William M. Tweed on board, made the following statement:

"About 11 o'clock on last Saturday night, when I was in latitude 42° 2', longitude 62° 2', about two hundred miles south-west of Sable Island Bank, I passed a large, three-masted, full ship-rigged propeller of apparently about three thousand tons burden, which seemed to be laboring heavily, and which I fancied to be in distress. She had no sails set, had steam up, and was making very little headway. She was heading in a direction about south-west from Cape Sable. It was a moonlight night, and I had a fair view of the ship, which I took, from her general appearance, to be a large man-of-war. I saw no guns, however, nor any port-holes open, nor many men on the decks. I passed within about six hundred yards of her, and should have gone to her relief had she made any signals of distress, but she had no flag flying and did not speak to me nor I to her. There was no peculiarity about her build to denote her as an American ship. My first impression was that she was in distress, but as she kept on her course, although laboring and rolling very heavily, and did not notice us, I did not go nearer to her, as it would have been extremely dangerous, the sea being very heavy, the weather rough, and the wind blowing a stiff gale. I was not aware that Tweed had left Vigo on the Franklin, or I would have endeavored to speak the vessel, although it did not notice me. I had experienced exceedingly heavy weather for over two weeks before I saw this steamer, having endured a succession of gales from the north and north-north-west."

It is not impossible that the vessel Capt. Bernecker saw was the Franklin, which answers his description—a "large, three-masted, full ship-rigged propeller of about three thousand tons burden." Both vessels were steering in substantially the same direction, and as the passage of the bark was prolonged to fifty days on account of rough, heavy weather and strong, unfavorable winds, the same causes may have operated to delay the steamer.

THE FRANKLIN ONE OF THE STANCHEST SHIPS IN THE WORLD.

The following facts in regard to the Franklin are from the Army and Navy Journal:

"Every day brings out a new story about the Franklin, which has been thirty-five days from Vigo with Tweed on board. First, we are informed that this fine frigate does not carry sufficient coal to make the voyage, and next that she is one of the oldest ships in the Navy and is unseaworthy. The Franklin was launched just finished—in 1866, and is, therefore, only ten years old. She is one of the stanchest ships that ever floated on the ocean, and is the largest wooden vessel in the Navy. Her length on the boat water-line is 265 feet; her extreme breadth of beam on the load water-line is 53 feet 8 inches. Her mean draft of water, at load-line, is 25 feet 8 inches, at which draft she displaces 5,298 7-10 tons. The maximum speed of the vessel (on trial) that could be sustained in smooth water was 10 1-4 knots, or 11 73-100 statute miles per hour, on an hourly consumption of 7,215 pounds of coal. The vessel carries 860 tons coal. At the rate of 8 1-3 geographical miles per hour—200 knots per day—the vessel carries sufficient coal to steam 5,200 geographical miles, or 6,000 statute miles. The Franklin is in one of the best sailing ships in the Navy, and is in every way a safe and seaworthy vessel. If Tweed is on board the Franklin he will surely reach the United States. In this age of retrenchment all the vessels sail, and never use their steam-power except in emergencies: hence the long passage of the vessel. Steaming at the rate of 8⅓ knots per hour (200 knots per day) the Franklin would burn 32 86-100 tons of coal per day, which costs (at $10 per ton) $328 60, and for 3,000 miles the cost of the coal would be $328.10 by 15=$4,929. A good deal more than the ex-'boss of the New-York Ring' is worth dead or alive."

THE HEMPSTEAD RESERVOIR SUIT.

The hearing of evidence in the suit of Kingsley and Keeny against the City of Brooklyn, to recover $178,000 for work alleged to have been done on the Hempstead Reservoir, was resumed yesterday before the Referees. Chief-Engineer Adams testified at the commencement of the present suit that the reservoir was finished, with the exception of the dam, which needed eight feet of facing. Two letters known as the "water-scare" letters, written by Adams and sent to the Water Board, one on Jan. 27, 1871, and one in February of the same year, were put in evidence. The letters set forth that there was a scarcity of water, and were supposed to have been written for the purpose of manufacturing public opinion in favor of the building of the Hempstead Reservoir. Adams was the only witness examined, and his testimony was mainly of a technical nature. The hearing will be resumed to-morrow.

THE "WALLACK" CLUB.

The "Wallack," one of the prominent amateur theatrical clubs of the City, gave a very enjoyable entertainment at the Lyceum theatre last evening, under the management of Mr. A. S. Fitch. The pieces presented were "David Garrick" and "The Loan of a Lover," in the former of which Miss Ellis-Arden played Ada Ingot, and in the latter, Gertrude. In "David Garrick" the title rôle was presented by Mr. T. F. Clark, Simon Ingot by Mr. Eddy, and Squire Chivy by Mr. W. R. Hind. In the "Loan of a Lover" Mr. T. C. Hall took the part of Peter Spyk. This was the first performance of the club's fourth season, and it appeared to give much pleasure to a numerous audience.

John A. Dix, Chairman, and Drake De Kay, Secretary.

THE LICK ESTATE.

The San Francisco Alta of the 2d inst. says: "The filing of the application by Mr. John H. Lick for letters of administration upon the estate of the late James Lick was not wholly unanticipated. We learn from a trustworthy source that negotiations have been going on ever since Mr. Lick's arrival in San Francisco, between himself and the Trustees under the trust deeds, to come to some arrangement by which a contest might be avoided, and, though they are still pending, there does not present the least likelihood of the matter being arranged. A settlement on a basis of $500,000 to be paid to Mr. Lick by the residuary legatees, the California Pioneers and the Academy of Sciences, has been mentioned. The present indications are that there will be a complete contest upon the whole three deeds. The proceedings in the Probate Court are preliminary to a suit in a District Court to set them aside, on the ground of undue influence exercised over Mr. James Lick and of his insanity. The hearing of the application for the granting of letters of administration has been set for the 20th inst. by Judge Myrick."

GIN-HOUSES BURNED.

The Columbus, (Ga.,) Enquirer of the 7th instant says: "We have carefully looked over files and find recorded since Sept. 1, forty-three gin-houses burned. Of these twenty-nine were in Georgia and fourteen in Alabama. They must have averaged five hundred dollars each, so as to make the total loss from houses alone $21,000. Of the twenty-nine burned in Georgia, we find with them were destroyed 200 bales of cotton worth now $10,000. So we find that with the houses the loss in Georgia in less than two months has been $24,500. Of the twenty-nine houses destroyed in Georgia, of eight, the precise losses in cotton are not given. This will make the total loss greater. Of the Alabama houses we have no losses of cotton, but it is safe to say the losses from the two States have fully amounted to $75,000, which have gone up in smoke. Is it not better to spend some money in insurance? These losses are not the results or designs but the larger proportion of accident. Grit in the saw, a match accidentally dropped—a rock—almost anything may cause a conflagration. Sometimes no cause can guard against it."

BIVOUACKING IN SERVIA.

From the London News.

Darkness fell when we were in the vicinity of a large bivouac of troops on the edge of the valley, and yet some distance from Sarvanovac. We did not know the road, and it seemed the wisest course to spend the night by a watch-fire in the bivouac, and go on in the morning. Passing through the camp, we found the officers of the brigade in front of a hut which they had come to consider their home, and wherein, to judge by their numbers, by its size—or rather smallness—and by the hay which littered every foot of floor, they must have been rather tightly packed on retiring to repose. In the meantime they were seated round a fire, drinking tea out of tumblers, and tossing for dinars. Where the Briton calls, "Heads or tails?" the Servian challenge is "Milan or not Milan?" which is as if we said "Victoria or not Victoria?" Russians and Servians were amicably trying their luck, and I saw one handsome young Russian persevere till he was utterly "rooked," and he had even exhausted his borrowing power, when he left the plank which served as a gambling-table and entered into a conversation with me on the subject of "Le boxe," in which he avowed himself a proficient. No "science" could save him from the ugly shell wound on the biceps with which he was tramping to the rear next day, when Mr. Villiers saw him and gave him directions for the Verbandplatz. It rained heavily in the night, and it was from a sodden bivouac that, damp and stiff, we rose to journey onward to Sarvanovac, which we found lay to the north, up one of the little side valleys.

A SATISFACTORY EXPLANATION.

The Utica Herald of Thursday morning says: "A short time ago we published an item from a Philadelphia newspaper announcing that the wife of Rev. James C. Stewart, of Oswego, had been arrested at the Centennial upon the charge of purloining jewelry from the Italian Department. The statement of the arrest was true, but it was made by error, no wrong having been committed or intended. Mrs. Stewart, separated from her husband, was selecting a necklace for her younger sister. She took two from the case, and while examining them saw her sister in the crowd. Wishing to know which would please her most, she followed, still holding the necklace in her hand and calling the sister by name. The sister disappeared in the crowd and a detective arrested Mrs. Stewart upon the charge of stealing the jewelry. She went to head-quarters and sent for her husband, who came and was identified by Bishop Simpson. The statement of facts made by the lady was considered sufficient and she was allowed to go. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart speak highly of the courtesy of the detective and other officers, who only did what was their duty until the annoying incident was explained. A similar incident happened to the wife of a wealthy broker with like results. The friends of Mrs. Stewart did not need this explanation, but they will be glad to have the circumstances explained."

A MAN SAVED AND WON.

A Boston clergyman, at a recent temperance meeting, told the following story, remarking that he knew the parties referred to: In one of the Canadian cities, a few years ago, a young lawyer became addicted to habits of intemperance, and finally got so low that one day he fell down drunk in a public street, and lay there with the sun pouring upon his face. A young lady, a stranger to him, passing by, took pity upon him, and covered his face with her handkerchief. When he came to his senses, and was told of the act of kindness, he was so affected by it that he said he would thereafter be a temperate man. He took the pledge, and soon became a promising man in his profession. Not long after he was introduced to the young lady who had done him that act of kindness, and afterward married her. The parties are living happily together, and the young lawyer is now the Attorney General of one of the Canadian Provinces.

A SAD ACCIDENT.

A LITTLE GIRL CRUSHED BY THE CARS—ESCAPE OF HER COMPANIONS.

The Utica Herald says that a sad accident occurred on the Utica, Clinton and Binghamton Road near Oriskany Falls Wednesday noon, resulting in the decapitation of Nettie Hicks, aged nine years, a very bright and interesting daughter of Warren D. Hicks, of that place, and the narrow escape of three of her companions from the same fate. They were hunting for beech-nuts. The Herald's correspondent at Oriskany Falls gives the details as follows: "This afternoon Nettie Hicks, aged nine years, youngest daughter of Warren D. Hicks, was instantly killed by engine No. 61, drawing a wild-cat train of twenty loaded cars. About 1:30 P. M., as Engineer Koon was rounding a curve, half a mile south of this village, he saw on a trestle fifty yards ahead four young girls—Misses Julia Hazard, Lena Hazard, Helen and Nettie Hicks. He whistled 'down brakes,' and reversed his engine, hoping to check the speed of the train sufficiently to allow the girls to get across, but finding that impossible, shouted to them to jump into the stream. Helen Hicks and Lena Hazard jumped and saved themselves. Miss Julia Hazard made a brave and desperate effort to save Nettie Hicks by pulling her off the trestle, but failed. Julia then dropped through an opening into the stream, miraculously escaping death as the engine struck her head as she dropped, taking off her hat and comb, and making a slight scalp-wound. Little Nettie's head was completely severed from her body and crushed beyond recognition. No blame can be attached to engineer Koon or the train hands. It was through their prompt efforts that the three others escaped death. Miss Hazard states they heard the whistle for the trestle some minutes before they attempted to cross, and she advised the party not to go on until the train passed. The three others started and she followed. When about one-third the distance across, she heard the whistle for brakes and saw their perilous position, but it was too late. Mr. and Mrs. Hicks are at the Centennial, and as yet they know nothing of the sadness at their home."

TEXAN HOSPITALITY.

The San Antonio Herald says: "In no city in the United States is the travel-stained, weary traveler taken as good care of as he is in a San Antonio hotel. The manners and customs of the guest are carefully studied. A young man from the frontier, stopping at one of our hotels, told the clerk the other evening that he was going to be out late. 'Just wait a minute,' replied the accommodating clerk, and he rushed off, but soon reappeared with a large envelope, which he placed in the guest's breast pocket, with the remark: 'That is a bond for your appearance before the Recorder, properly signed. As soon as you are arrested for being drunk and disorderly, just give the bond to the Policeman, mention my name, and he will bring you home in a hack. Good night.'"

THE REPUBLICAN VICTORY.

NO CHANGE IN THE SITUATION.

LATEST RETURNS FROM SOUTH CAROLINA, FLORIDA, AND LOUISIANA—THE RESULT REMAINS SUBSTANTIALLY AS PREVIOUSLY ANNOUNCED—ORDERS FROM PRESIDENT GRANT TO GEN. SHERMAN—THE VITAL IMPORTANCE OF AN HONEST CANVASS.

The special dispatches received by THE TIMES from official sources and its special correspondents since yesterday morning do not change the result as claimed by us during the last two days. They all agree that the three disputed States—Louisiana, South Carolina, and Florida—have polled unquestionable majorities for Hayes and Wheeler, which cannot be overcome, except by the grossest tampering with the returns, or the most barefaced frauds in the count. The exact majority in Louisiana will probably be made known to-day; that of South Carolina is from 6,000 to 8,000, while that of Florida is definitely fixed at not less than 1,500. Ohio, which the Democrats were trying to claim on Thursday to offset their Southern losses, has gone Republican by at least 7,000, and the majority in Oregon has been increased by later advices to 1,252.

President Grant has ordered Gen. Sherman to direct the officers in charge of the troops in Louisiana and Florida to be vigilant with the force at their command to preserve peace and good order, and to see that the people and the legal Boards of Canvassers are unmolested in the performance of their duties. The full text of the President's orders to the General commanding the Army will be found elsewhere.

Our list of Congressmen is not materially changed. Mr. B. F. Marsh, Republican, proves to be elected in the Tenth District of Illinois. Yesterday we conceded the district to the Democrats. The Democrats claim to have chosen their candidate in the Third District of Missouri by one majority. These two changes counterbalance each other, and conceding them both, the membership of the House remains unchanged as printed yesterday—143 Republicans and 147 Democrats. It should be added that the Republicans of the Sixth District of Missouri claim to have elected Mr. Havens by about 200 majority. Should their claim prove correct, the House would stand, as at present advised, 144 Republicans and 146 Democrats. New-Hampshire would then, with its three members, decide to which party should be given the control of the House, should not later returns make other changes in the list of the members already chosen.

The latest returns, in large part official, show that the Assembly of this State is Republican beyond question, and by a good working majority. Our table shows 72 Republicans to 56 Democrats, which is a change of only one from the estimate published in Wednesday's TIMES.

THE BALLOT TO BE PROTECTED.

THE PRESIDENT ORDERS THE COMMANDING OFFICERS IN FLORIDA AND LOUISIANA TO PRESERVE PEACE AND PROTECT THE LEGAL CANVASSERS—A FAIR COUNT ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 10.—The following is a copy of a telegram from President Grant sent at about noon to-day:

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 10.

Gen. W. T. Sherman, Washington, D. C.:

Instruct Gen. Augur in Louisiana, and Gen. Ruger in Florida, to be vigilant with the forces at their command to preserve peace and good order, and to see that the proper and legal Boards of Canvassers are unmolested in the performance of their duties. Should there be any grounds of suspicion of fraudulent count on either side, it should be reported and denounced at once. No man worthy of the office of President should be willing to hold it if counted in or placed there by fraud. Either party can afford to be disappointed in the result. The country cannot afford to have the result tainted by the suspicion of illegal or false returns.

U. S. GRANT.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 10.

Gen. Sherman, Washington, D. C.:

Send all the troops to Gen. Augur he may deem necessary to insure entire quiet and a peaceful count of the ballots actually cast. They may be taken from South Carolina unless there is reason to suspect an outbreak there. The presence of citizens from other States, I understand, is requested in Louisiana to see that the Board of Canvassers make a fair count of the vote actually cast. It is to be hoped that representative and fair men of both parties will go. U. S. GRANT.

TROOPS FOR NEW-ORLEANS.

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 10.—Company C of the Fourteenth United States Infantry, which is stationed here, was to-day ordered to New-Orleans.

DISCUSSION IN PHILADELPHIA—HOW THE PRESIDENT'S ORDER WAS RECEIVED—THE DEMOCRATIC EFFORTS TO CARRY FLORIDA—SEVERAL GENTLEMEN INVITED BY THE PRESIDENT TO GO TO NEW-ORLEANS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 10.—The publication, late this evening, of the President's order to Gen. Sherman to send troops to Florida and Louisiana, has created a new excitement. The proclamation of Hewitt has also stimulated public discussion. The general temper and tone is not unfavorable among the more moderate Democrats, who confess that the sentiments are sound and well stated, but they are horrified about the troops. Republicans universally approve, so far as one may judge from the casual discourse on the streets. The orders are understood to have been sent soon after midnight last night, and to have reached their destination before morning. The occasion was furnished by information, of which an outline was printed in THE TIMES this morning, in a statement from the National Committee. The information received was of such a character as to warrant a suspicion that the Democracy intended to overcome the Republican majority in Florida by violence. It was known that immediately on the announcement that Florida would decide the election, Democratic agents had started South, and so far as heard from they were not of the sort to trouble themselves much merely to witness a fair count. The indications of intended interference were so strong that immediate steps were taken to protect whatever single result the votes actually cast might disclose. This is all there was of it. As to the legality of the order, the President has the same rights to order troops from Georgia to Florida as to New-York Harbor, and the Democrats would not have found fault with that or denounced it as unlawful. All the information received confirms the belief here that Hayes has gained the election.

At the request of Gov. Kellogg, the President has asked several gentlemen to go to New-Orleans to witness the counting of the votes by the Returning Board. Among those thus far requested to be present are Gen. Garfield, Gen. Logan, Congressman Kasson, of Iowa; Mr. Ditty, of Maryland; M. S. Quay, Secretary of State of Pennsylvania; Thomas Boaver and John Shoenberger, two large manufacturers of this State; Gen. James L. Reynolds, brother of Gen. John Reynolds, killed at Gettysburg, and of Admiral Reynolds, now in the Navy; and Henry B. Stebbins, of New-York. Many others will be asked to go to New-Orleans, where it is not an honest, but a dishonest, count that would endanger the election of Hayes. The President will return to Washington to-morrow noon.

TROOPS ORDERED FROM SOUTH CAROLINA TO FLORIDA.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—Gen. Sherman has acted upon the telegrams received from the President, and has received word from Gen. Ruger that he has ordered nine companies to Florida, and will order five more, and go in person with them, leaving Col. Hunt, of the Fifth Artillery, in command in South Carolina. A company of artillery will be part of the troops sent from South Carolina.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Nov. 10.—United States troops have been ordered from South Carolina to Florida. Two companies stationed at Aiken left this afternoon for Tallahassee.

SAVANNAH, Nov. 10.—Transportation has been ordered for troops to pass through this city to-night for Florida.

THE VICTORY IN FLORIDA.

AN EXACT STATEMENT OF THE SITUATION—DESPERATE ATTEMPTS OF THE DEMOCRATS TO DESTROY THE BALLOTS—THE STATE INDISPUTABLY REPUBLICAN BY 2,000 MAJORITY—TWO REPUBLICAN CONGRESSMEN CONFIDENTLY CLAIMED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

JACKSONVILLE, Nov. 10.—The importance which Florida has suddenly assumed before the country calls for a fuller statement regarding the situation here than has been made. The election everywhere was an unusually quiet one, although considerable apprehension was felt at a number of points. The vote was the largest ever cast, the colored vote being almost in a body for the Republican ticket, while the Republican white vote was unexpectedly large. Heavy Republican counties came fully up to expectation, while the Democrats were disappointed in their heavy strongholds. This state of affairs becoming known, the Democrats raised the cry of fraud, and, in face of 2,000 majority against them, now claim the State. From the first, they boasted that they would carry the State at all hazards. On what that claim was based appears now from what took place in Jackson County, for instance, where a raid was made on two heavy Republican precincts, the ballot-boxes violated, the poll-list destroyed, and false returns made, whereby it is made to appear that that county has given 100 Democratic majority, instead of the 500 or 600 Republican majority which it actually has given. The same night a train containing a party of Republicans was wrecked, to cut off communication, and a number of bridges were burned and the track torn up. The Republicans have taken steps to repair the fraud and preserve the true majority in the county. Similar proceedings are reported in other distant counties, but it may be stated for a certainty that the desperate plans to thus wipe out the true Republican majority of 2,000 in the State will be foiled at all points. Fortunately for the Republicans, the actual results in the heavy counties became known too early for the success of the Democratic schemes. Their only hope here is based on compulsion and violence. The Republicans of Florida fully realize their position before the country, and will do their whole duty. They have a Board of State Canvassers whose action will be independent of all clamor and in defiance of the threats of violence and the attempts at intimidation. And thus the fruits of as gallant a fight as was ever made will be preserved.

The country should understand that the Republican majority here is indisputable, and without flaw; that the fight has been made without help from any quarter, and, from first to last, against all sorts of adverse influences. Intense rancor prevails outside, and force, and every conceivable influence, in support of the desperate purpose of Democrats, are threatened. Leading Democrats all over the country are constantly telegraphing, to encourage their party leaders, who are already sufficiently desperate. It cannot be disguised that the situation is a very grave one; meanwhile, the Republicans are vigilant, cool, and confident, and will stand by the square and honest victory. Gov. Hayes, for President, was fully five or six hundred ahead of Stearns, for Governor. The latter's election, as well as the election of two Republican Congressmen, is claimed with entire confidence. The Legislature is Democratic.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED REPUBLICAN MAJORITY, ALLOWING THE DEMOCRATS ALL THEIR REGISTERED NAMES IN THE COUNTIES NOT YET HEARD FROM.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

JACKSONVILLE, Nov. 10.—Reports from Marianna, Jackson County, give 443 Republican majority. In two Republican precincts in the county the poll was attacked, the Inspectors were overpowered, and the returns changed to Democratic majorities; the ballots were burned, and the result in the county was changed, giving a Democratic majority of 106. There is great excitement throughout the State. The Republican majority is certainly 500 in Jackson County. Democratic frauds in other counties have been detected. The Democrats are desperate, and the Republicans are firm and hold the fort. Allowing the Democrats every registered vote they have in the counties to hear from, the State stands surely Republican. There are fears of desperate ventures in a few remote counties where the vote is small. Only unheard-of tampering with returns and gross violence can give the State to the Democrats. The Republicans of Florida have fairly 1,500 majority, are wide awake, and determined.

PETER JONES,
Secretary Republican Committee.

THE DEMOCRATIC CLAIMS WHOLLY UNFOUNDED—THE STATE SURE FOR HAYES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TALLAHASSEE, Nov. 10.—The claim of the Democrats to Florida has no foundation. Returns come in slowly as we have no rail or telegraphic communication with the extreme southern and western counties. The situation has not changed since yesterday. The counties not yet heard from cannot reduce the Republican majority already reported, below 1,000. We are confident of this and Hayes can feel sure of Florida. M. MARTIN,
Chairman Republican State Committee.

PRIVATE DISPATCHES CONFIRMING THE PRESS REPORTS OF A REPUBLICAN MAJORITY.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—The Secretary of the Treasury received a dispatch from Gov. Stearns at noon to-day saying that Florida had gone Republican by 2,500 majority. Mr. Martin, Chairman of the Republican Campaign Committee, also telegraphs from Tallahassee to a friend in this city that "the Republicans have elected their National and State tickets, sure," and a similar private message was received early this morning from A. H. Knight, Collector of Internal Revenue at Jacksonville.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 10.—Private telegrams to Col. Bristow and other Republicans, from the South and from Washington, claim that Florida has surely gone Republican.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—A report was current on the streets here to-day that a private telegram had been received from Senator Conover conceding Florida to the Democrats by a majority variously stated at 1,000, 1,200, and 2,000. Diligent inquiry failed to discover any responsible authority for the story, but it was to-night revived in the shape of a specific statement that Senator Conover had telegraphed to that effect to the National Republican Committee in New York City. Inquiries addressed to that committee, authorize the denial of the existence of any such dispatch.

HAYES' TRIUMPH IN LOUISIANA.

A DECIDED REPUBLICAN MAJORITY—INCENDIARY DISPATCHES RECEIVED IN NEW-ORLEANS FROM NORTHERN DEMOCRATS—THE DEMOCRATIC HOPES BASED ON THE ESTIMATED RESULTS IN THE "BULLDOZED" PARISHES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 10.—As it becomes more apparent that Louisiana is to be the national pivot for election turning, the political situation here grows critical. Giving the Democrats all the benefit of all the "bulldozing" work, Louisiana has gone Republican by a decided majority. Had the national contest been decided elsewhere, the Republican victory would not be questioned as to this State now. Democrats from all quarters are sending appeals to Louisiana Democrats to insure a Democratic majority at all hazards. A dispatch from the Chicago Times office, published in the Democrat here, says: "All eyes and hopes turn to Louisiana. If you tamely submit to disenfranchisement, the end is defeat for the hope of reform. The North will say God speed to a cleaning out of the Packard-Kellogg scoundrels." This is only a sample of the incendiary dispatches sent to this inflammable people. Within a day several prominent Northern Democrats will be here to direct movements in person. The Democrats rest their hopes entirely upon the intimidated parishes. The three parishes of Ouachita, East and West Baton Rouge have a registered vote of 2,103 white and 5,330 black. These parishes, according to Democratic returns, gave Kellogg in 1872 a majority of 2,922; in 1874 they gave a Republican majority of 2,621; the Democrats now claim a majority of 3,000 in the same parishes. The Parish of East Feliciana in 1874 gave a Republican majority of nine hundred, having at the same time local party divisions. The Democrats now claim a majority of 1,743 there, and only one Republican vote was cast on Tuesday, and that by the Commissioner. The Parish of Morehouse gave a Republican majority of 363 in 1874; at this election the Democrats claim a majority of 528 in Morehouse—this, in the face of the fact that, in the parishes not intimidated, the present election shows large Republican gains, and also shows that where not molested, the negroes, with very few exceptions, voted the Republican ticket. Packard says he is elected by about 5,000 majority. Taking the vote as it stands, without thought of contesting the "bull-dozed" parishes, the Democrats do not claim the Legislature, while they are claiming a majority for Tilden. The New-Orleans Republican says: "The election of sixty-one Republican members of the House is assured—five more than a majority." Among the Republicans elected to the House is ex-Gov. Warmoth from Plaquemine Parish. The returns come in very slowly, and it is impossible to give the exact Republican majority at this time. The streets are crowded with excited people, especially about the Democratic head-quarters and telegraph offices. So far, no riotous demonstrations have been made. The Republicans are quiet and confident, and feel assured that in a few days they will be able to show that against all the adverse circumstances, and in spite of the terrorism which has existed in many country parishes, the Republican State ticket has been elected beyond question, and a majority given for the Hayes and Wheeler Electors.

A SUGGESTION FROM GOV. KELLOGG.

The following dispatch was received at the Head-quarters of the National Republican Committee in this City yesterday:

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 9, 1876.

Hon. Z. Chandler:

We have received private dispatches that leading Democrats are en route. Perhaps you had better send some men of national reputation who have the confidence of this country. We want the situation and its facts thoroughly known, and we will stand or fall by the record, knowing we are right. WM. P. KELLOGG.

STATEMENT BY GOV. KELLOGG.

VERY FEW OFFICIAL RETURNS RECEIVED—DEMOCRATIC OUTRAGES AND INTIMIDATION IN COUNTRY PARISHES—A LARGE REPUBLICAN MAJORITY CERTAIN.

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 10.—Gov. Kellogg furnishes the following statement to the Associated Press regarding the election:

Very few official returns have been received outside of the City by the Secretary of State, the proper custodian. Unofficial statements have been received and published here of fifteen Republican and thirteen Democratic parishes, besides the city, twenty-eight out of fifty-seven, which may be called tolerably reliable. The other parishes are estimated by each side, and the State is claimed according to each estimate by both sides. The Democrats only claim the State by estimating the Republican parishes of East and West Feliciana, East Baton Rouge, Morehouse and Ouachita having given them, as they claim, nearly 4,000 majority. No one can dispute that these parishes were overrun and intimidated by armed bands of the White League before and on the day of election. These parishes have always been largely Republican. The registration in these parishes is, White 3,698, Black, 8,709. They gave me 3,000 majority in 1872 by the returns of the fusion Democratic Board, and they gave the Republican candidate 3,900 majority in 1874 as conceded by the Democratic State Central Committee. In Ouachita a deputy United States Marshal was killed on election day, the polls taken possession of and run by the White League.

In East Feliciana not a single Republican vote was allowed to be polled. The Republicans were not allowed to run a ticket. This parish is next to the Mississippi line, and has been turbulent, more or less, since the Democrats obtained possession of Mississippi. In this parish I received over 900 majority in 1872, and in 1874 the Republicans carried the parish by more than a thousand majority. The vote claimed by the Democrats in these parishes was procured by intimidation, violence, and assassination, and the proof of this fact is overwhelming and perfectly conclusive. Notwithstanding the claimed vote in these parishes, we confidently believe we have carried the State. The Democrats never claimed to have carried the State by but about 4,000 in 1874, not counting Carroll Parish, which gave us over 1,800 majority, but where they always alleged frauds and refused to concede but about 900 of this majority to us. They admit that we have gained in the city alone 2,400 votes over the vote of 1874. They admit we have carried Iberia, St. Martin, Assumption, Rapides, Caddo, Webster, and Lafourche, already heard from, which they carried in 1874. They admit that we have increased our majorities in Bossier, Madison, Tensas, Concordia, Natchitoches, Plaquemine, and St. Charles. Of course, none of these are official. There are only about twenty parishes accessible by rail or telegraph, and the official vote of several of the remote parishes cannot be had for five or six days. The result will probably be close, counting the vote in the five bulldozed parishes, as the Democrats say. Not counting these parishes, while the Republicans will be deprived of a legitimate majority of nearly 4,000, in no contingency can the Democrats have carried the State. It will not be denied that, with scarcely an exception, in all the heretofore Republican parishes, except the five bulldozed parishes the Republicans have gained over their majorities of 1874. Neither can it be denied that the colored people voted the Republican ticket with, if possible, more unanimity than ever before. I have heard that several prominent gentlemen are coming here, drawn hither by the exigency growing out of this election. I am glad of this. I telegraphed Secretary Chandler last night suggesting that several gentlemen of prominence, who have the confidence of the country, be sent here—such men as William M. Evarts, ex-Gov. Dix, Mr. Bristow, Senator Blaine, George T. Hoar, Gen. Logan, Stanley Matthews, or such gentlemen. If the North wants a true disclosure of our affairs, let men come whose reputations will be a guarantee that they come to find the truth and not to manufacture newspaper and sensational articles against us. The statements of the estimated returns referred to are the votes cast for the State ticket. That the vote for Hayes was considerably larger than that of the State ticket, the Governor said, the Democrats generally admit: that Leonard Smith and Darrell are elected to Congress, and that the Republicans have carried the Legislature. He said he had just received a dispatch from Smith, and one other gentleman from Shreveport, that desperate efforts are being made by the Democrats in the parishes up the Red River to change or destroy the returns.

SOUTH CAROLINA'S MAJORITY.

THE REPUBLICAN MAJORITY FULLY EIGHT THOUSAND—DEMOCRATIC VIOLENCE IN SEVERAL COUNTIES—THE OFFICIAL RETURNS NOT NEARLY COMPLETE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBIA, Nov. 10.—We do not change our views from those sent last night. Official returns have not been received from more than half the counties. The remaining figures are reports or estimates. The Democrats report heavy majorities in several counties where our reports represent such violence and terror as to suppress or defeat the will of the majority entirely. Such results are the only basis of the Democratic claims of carrying the State. The official count will give the State to Hayes according to all present indications.

D. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBIA, Nov. 10.—The returns to-day do not change the result. The State is safe for Hayes and Chamberlain by a decided majority. The Democratic dispatches are based on party estimates, not on official returns. We are sure of a good majority. R. B. ELLIOTT,
Chairman Republican State Committee.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—Senator Patterson received to-day the following dispatch from Gov. Chamberlain, dated Columbia, 1:30 P. M.:

"South Carolina is safe for the Republicans. The Democrats claim it on the basis of immense apparent majorities in Edgefield, Laurens, Barnwell, and Abbeville. If any such results appear they are fraudulent and will not avail. Giving the Democrats all they claim in the counties not yet definitely heard from, and giving the Republicans only what we know we have, the result is a majority for the Republicans. Estimating upon the basis of the real and honest vote and final canvass and determination we shall carry the State by fully eight thousand."

ELECTION OF RAWSON, REPUBLICAN, JUDGE OF THE SUPREME COURT.

ROCHESTER, Nov. 10.—For Justice of the Supreme Court, the Counties of Monroe, Livingston, Ontario, Steuben, Seneca, Wayne, Cayuga, and Yates voting, Rawson, Rep., is elected by a majority of 7,759. In Monroe County Rawson's majority is 92.

HAYES' MAJORITY IN OHIO.

SEMI-OFFICIAL RETURNS FROM ALL BUT TWO COUNTIES—HAYES' MAJORITY OVER 7,000—THE GOVERNOR CONFIDENT OF HIS ELECTION.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 10.—The Republican State Committee now have semi-official returns from eighty-six out of eighty-eight counties of Ohio which show a net Republican gain of 623 over Barnes' majority in October, which was 6,636. If the two counties not heard from should cast exactly the same vote they did in October, Hayes' majority will be 7,259.

The excitement over the election news is unabated. The streets have been filled all day with excited crowds much more irritable and less generous than heretofore. Several street fights have occurred. The Democratic State Committee still assert their perfect confidence in the election of Tilden.

The Republican Committee, a majority of whom have heretofore had doubts as to the result, are now perfectly confident of Hayes' election, and have so notified their correspondents. Gov. Hayes himself no longer doubts his election, and is confident that an honest canvass of the votes in States that have been set down as doubtful will fully prove this fact to the perfect satisfaction of all fair-minded men.

NEW-HAMPSHIRE.

THE REPUBLICAN MAJORITY OVER 3,000.

CONCORD, Nov. 10.—Two hundred and thirty-two towns give Hayes 41,546; Tilden, 38,456; scattering, 93. The remaining three towns last March gave Cheney 33; Marcy, 42.

MASSACHUSETTS.

HAYES' MAJORITY NEARLY 41,000.

BOSTON, Nov. 10.—The entire vote of Massachusetts, with the exception of the town of Gosnold, is as follows: Hayes, 149,205; Tilden, 108,247; Rice, 136,282; Adams, 105,829; Baker, 12,127. Rice's plurality is 30,453; his majority 18,326. The official returns in the Third Congressional District show that Dean, Dem., is elected by seven votes.

CONNECTICUT.

THE COMPLETE VOTE OF THE STATE FOR PRESIDENT, GOVERNOR, AND MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

The Hartford Courant of Friday gives the subjoined statement of the vote of Connecticut on Tuesday, and says: "The total vote reaches as high as 121,696, which is a remarkable increase. We have no doubt that, except for the certificate voting and the repeating and fraudulent voting in the cities, the State would have given a decided Republican majority, and would have elected two Republican Congressmen:"

THE RESULT IN NEW-JERSEY.

The result of the election in New-Jersey is the choice of the Tilden Electors by about twelve thousand majority; the re-election to Congress of Messrs. Sinnickson, Republican, and Ross, Cutter, and Hardenberg, Democrats; the gain of a Republican Congressman, Mr. Peddie, to succeed Mr. Teese, Democrat, in the Sixth District; the return of a Republican to succeed Mr. Dobbins, and a Democrat to succeed Mr. Hamilton—the delegation standing four Democrats to three Republicans. The Democracy secure the State Senate by one, gaining Senators in Burlington, Middlesex, and Hunterdon, and losing one in Passaic. Cape May returns a Republican and Sussex a Democrat. Messrs. Thorn and Jarrard were defeated for re-election. Of the new Senators Mr. Hobart, of Passaic, was formerly Speaker of the House, and Mr. Ward, of Sussex, a member of that body. Mr. Leaming, of Cape May, is the present Surrogate of that county. The House of Assembly is a tie, with one Democratic seat to be contested. The Republicans gain one member each in Cumberland, Gloucester, Ocean, and Monmouth but lose one each in Burlington, Mercer, Middlesex, Salem, and Warren; two in Essex, and four in Hudson. Of the members of the last Assembly the Republicans return 18 and the Democrats 12, leaving 30 new members. Of the newly elected, Mr. Sykes has been a member of Congress, and Messrs. Stevens and Yard members of former Assemblies.

The re-elected members are as follows: Republicans—Messrs. Ashley, Taylor, Cavileer, Scovel Lund, Stevens, Payne, Traphagen, Howell, Van Renssalaer, Drake, Moore, Griggs, Cunningham, Keasbey, Voorhees, Corey, and Vail. The Democrats re-elect Messrs. Winant, Ferdon, Matthews, Hannon, Rabe, Campbell, Martin, Rue, Sanderson, Bergen, Egan, and Mackey.

Senator Abbett, (Dem.,) of Hudson, will probably be President of the next Senate, and Mr. Scovel, (Rep.,) of Camden, or Bergen, (Dem.,) of Somerset, Speaker of the Assembly. The Democrats will probably elect the successor to Mr. Frelinghuysen, unless the contested seat should be decided in favor of the Republican.

NORTH CAROLINA.

THE DEMOCRATIC MAJORITY INCREASING.

RALEIGH, Nov. 10.—Additional returns continue to increase the Democratic majority in this State. It may reach 17,000. A painful anxiety in regard to the Presidential election is manifest in this city to-night among adherents of both parties.

THE RESULT IN ILLINOIS.

A GAIN OF SIX REPUBLICAN CONGRESSMEN.

CHICAGO, Nov. 10.—Gen. John M. Corse, a prominent Democrat, and Chairman of the First Congressional Committee, left this city last night for Louisiana.

Besides the Republican Congressmen gained in Illinois, whose names have been already reported, Marsh is elected in the Tenth District. This makes a gain of six Republican Congressmen and reverses the Congressional delegation from Illinois. The Republicans here claim, also, the election of Ashcroft over Sparks in the Sixteenth District.

INDIANA.

TILDEN'S MAJORITY A LITTLE OVER 5,000.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 10.—Seventy-two counties in full show a Democratic gain of 263 over the October election. The counties to be heard from gave a net Democratic majority of 5,349, to which is to be added 114—the number of votes Tilden is now ahead—making his probable majority 5,463.

11:30 P. M.—Returns from all but three counties in this State give Tilden 3,887 majority, being a Democratic gain of 251. The three counties to hear from, Adams, Crawford, and Pike, gave 1,503 Democratic majority last month, indicating a majority for Tilden of 5,450 in the whole State.

RETURNS FROM MISSOURI.

THE MAJORITIES IN THE CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS—TILDEN AHEAD OF THE STATE TICKET.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 10.—The following are the estimated or claimed majorities for Congressmen in the districts outside of this city: Fourth District, Hatcher, Dem., 18,000, no opposition; Fifth District, Bland, Dem., 6,000; Sixth District, Morgan, Dem., 750; (in this district the Republicans claim the election of Haven by 200 majority;) Seventh District, Crittenden, Dem., 4,000; Eighth District, Franklin, Dem., 7,000; Ninth District, Rea, Dem., 2,000; Tenth District, Pollard, Rep., 800 to 1,200; Eleventh District, Clark, Dem., 15,000 to 18,000; Twelfth District, Glover, Dem., 3,000; (there was practically no opposition in the Twelfth District;) Thirteenth District, Buckner, Dem., 12,000 to 15,000.

Unofficial returns from fifty counties in the State give Tilden 36,000 majority. Phelps, Dem., for Governor, has about ten per cent. less than Tilden. A re-examination of the vote in the Third District of this city, it was claimed last night, gives Frost, Dem., one majority over Metcalf, Rep., for Congress.

THE VOTE OF KANSAS.

HAYES' MAJORITY 40,000—NOT A COUNTY IN THE STATE FOR TILDEN.

TOPEKA, Nov. 10.—The official vote of every county in the State was counted to-day, and the majority for Hayes will reach 40,000, and that for Anthony, for Governor, 25,000. There are only three Democrats elected to the State Senate, and twelve to the lower house. Not a county in the State has given Tilden a majority.

THE VICTORY IN OREGON.

THE REPUBLICAN MAJORITY OVER TWELVE HUNDRED.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 10.—Full returns from twenty counties in Oregon show a Republican majority of 1,202. There remain three more counties to be heard from, two of which will offset each other, and the third will give fifty Republican majority. The accuracy of these returns can be relied on.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 10.—Press dispatches received this evening from Portland, Oregon, give, in twenty counties, 1,292 majority for Hayes. Only three counties, Curry, Grant, and Lake, remain to be heard from. These will be about a set off, and will not reduce the above majority.

CALIFORNIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 10.—Returns from the southern district do not yet certainly show whether Pacheco, Republican, or Wigginton, Democrat, is elected. The chances are in favor of the former. Luttrell, Democrat, is probably elected in the Third District.

ARKANSAS.

THE CONTEST IN THE THIRD CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 10.—The Congressional election in the Third District is still in doubt between Cravens and McClure., Rep. An official count only can decide the result.

THE ELECTION EXCITEMENT.

THE FEELING THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY UNABATED—THE ACTION OF THE PRESIDENT APPROVED.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—The excitement here is more intense than ever, and crowds are congregated at many points throughout the city, earnestly discussing the situation of affairs. Conflicting reports are received almost every hour from Florida, and are posted for the information of the crowds.

WILMINGTON, N. C., Nov. 10.—The excitement here to-day over the present aspect of the Presidential election is intense. At no time since the day of the election has there been anything to approximate the deep feeling manifested this afternoon. The Democrats claim that Tilden has been honestly elected, and if there is to be any trouble over the matter, the people of the North must decide the question. Republicans generally sustain the action of the President.

TUMULTUOUS CROWDS OF DEMOCRATIC ROUGHS BLOCKADING THE STREETS OF BALTIMORE—THE REBEL BATTLE-YELL AND CONFEDERATE SONGS INDULGED IN BY THE MOB—OPEN THREATS OF WAR.

Special Dispatch to The New-York Times.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 10.—For three days the city has been in a state of feverish excitement, and around the newspaper offices and political head-quarters there have been gathered such tumultuous crowds as were only seen on the 19th of April, 1861. The Democrats have held control of everything, and their throngs of roughs and strikers have made pandemonium of day and night. The streets in the centre of the city have been impassable and decent females have hardly dared to venture out. Cheers for Tilden and Jeff Davis were mingled with blasphemous curses on Hayes and the Republicans, and every now and then the genuine rebel yell could be heard rising above all the din. The excitement has been kept up from early morning far into the beginning of the next. As the confidence of the Democrats sank under the reversal of the prospects of Tilden's election, they grew more turbulent and riotous, and late to-night there is no abatement of the disorder. Democratic clubs have been parading the streets singing campaign songs and blocking up the highways. The scenes that have occurred have been disgraceful in the extreme, and all good citizens feel humiliated. The mob is principally made up of the same roughs who carried the elections in Baltimore, before the war, with the knife and pistol, and who have gravitated over to the Democracy as the stronger party in local politics. Being plentifully supplied with money by the leaders, in payment for their dirty work on election day, they have maintained their enthusiasm on liquor, and by night have made roaring, howling maniacs of themselves.

At an early hour this morning a gang of them saluted the American office with the "Bonnie Blue Flag," "Dixie," and other Confederate songs. The supposed election of Tilden was hailed here as a Confederate success, and threats can everywhere be heard on the streets that if he is not given a majority of the Electoral College, there will be a new rebellion, or revolution, as they call it. They claim that South Carolina and Louisiana can only be counted for Hayes by the Returning Boards nullifying the will of the people, and that the Democrats will declare war before they will allow Hayes to take his seat on the votes of those two States. This wild and foolish talk can be heard at the Democratic head-quarters and among the mob on the streets, and it does not seem to be entirely whisky valor. The Democrats have twice made preparations since Tuesday for a jubilation meeting, but have each time concluded that they had better not hurrah until they were certain of the result. By keeping the whole Police force on duty, night and day, any serious trouble has been prevented. There has been a great deal of scuffling and knocking down among intoxicated Democrats, but the Republicans have kept out of the way and studiously avoided a collision, so that the Democrats have had all the fighting to themselves.

An instance of Democratic treachery in the Sixth Congressional District has come to light. Four counties of the District were solidly Republican, and combined, gave 739 majority for McComas. The remaining county (Montgomery) is Democratic, and the Democrats held back the announcement of its vote until they discovered what was necessary to overcome the outside Republican majority. Then they counted up 755 majority for their candidate, Walsh, in Montgomery, and so claim his election, while McComas is undoubtedly elected on an honest count.

THE ELECTION IN DAKOTA.

YANKTON, D. T., Nov. 10.—Kidder, Rep., is elected in this Territory, as Delegate to Congress, by a majority of nearly 4,000. The Legislature is Republican in both branches. The entire Republican Territorial ticket was successful.

THE COLORADO SENATORSHIP.

DENVER, Nov. 10.—In a caucus of Republican members of the Legislature to-day Hon. Jerome B. Chaffee was unanimously nominated for United States Senator.

THE LOCAL ELECTION IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 10.—A Portland (Oregon) dispatch says the returns from Washington Territory indicate the election of Jacobs, the Republican candidate for Delegate to Congress, by about 250 majority.

TROTTING AT UTICA.

UTICA, Nov. 10.—The trot between Great Eastern and Rarus, best three in five, mile heats, to wagon, for $1,000, took place on the Utica Park track to-day, and was won by Great Eastern in three straight heats. The weather was cloudy and cool, and the track damp and comparatively heavy. Rarus was driven by John Splane, and only arrived here this morning, after riding two days in the cars. The betting was even at the opening of the race. In the first heat Rarus had the pole, but was passed by Great Eastern on the turn, who led by from one to two lengths to the finish, Rarus breaking near the distance pole. Time—41, 1:19¾, 157, 2:35. In the second heat Great Eastern led by more than a length throughout. Time—39, 1:16, 1:53½, 2:30. In the third heat Great Eastern led by a half to one and a half lengths to the three-quarter pole, when he was lapped by Rarus for about thirty feet, and crowded closely to the finish. Time—38¾, 1:12, 1:42, 2:24¾.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

MEMOIRS OF JOHN QUINCY ADAMS. Comprising Portions of His Diary from 1795 to 1848. Edited by CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS. Vol. XI. Philadelphia: J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co.

The eleventh volume of John Quincy Adams' diary continues of the same quality as the ten preceding. It was essential to the character of the man that, while never rising to anything like a burst of eloquence, his daily journal should flow on without a break at just the same sustained level of excellence, exhibiting no less and no more of the writer himself and the political events of the time. The present volume deals with the Twenty-seventh and Twenty-eighth Congresses, from Sept. 1, 1841, to March 30, 1844, and therefore falls entirely within the Presidency of Tyler. Daniel Webster is Secretary of State, John C. Calhoun is in the Senate, and Henry A. Wise and Caleb Cushing enliven the House with motions and methods not at all to the taste of Mr. Adams. The encroachments of the slave-owners' party on the right of petition and free speech in regard to their peculiar institution are going briskly forward, while the old schemes for increase of territory for the benefit of slavery are in full vigor. Texas is fighting with Mexico, suspecting its own Governor, Houston, and clamoring to be admitted, slavery and all, into the Union. England is at work on the African coast attempting to destroy the slave trade, and the United States is being shamed into helping her. Both with Mexico and England unsettled boundary questions are making great stir, and the young nation, that does not know or remember what war really is, appears to be only too ready to fight either. Commodore Ap Catesby Jones is filbustering in California, while Cuba, alarmed and indignant at English interference with the slave trade, is calling on the Government at Washington to protect her.

This is the position of affairs while Mr. Adams is conscientiously jotting down the items of his diary for the years 1841 to 1844. As to more local politics, the prospect through his spectacles is no better. The Democrats are not only in power, but increasing their strength, and are continually charged by Mr. Adams with shameful truckling to the slaveholding aristocracy. It is especially in reference to Massachusetts men that he loses patience, for of them he expects better things. He querulously confides to his diary the disgust he feels at seeing riches override right, and the destructive materialization of slavery corrupt the minds of free men. He feels that old age is upon him, and groans aloud to think of the course that public affairs are taking and his own powerlessness to stem the tide. That others besides him felt in the same way is evident from Dickens' American Notes. On March 10, 1842, Mr. Adams records a visit of Charles Dickens to the House of Representatives. Subsequently appeared the Notes of the famous novelist, which caused so much angry comment in the United States. It will be remembered that the country is thus apostrophized:

"'Oh, Columbia! rotten to the core!'"

Undoubtedly it was slavery that Dickens meant, although it may be a question whether he fully understood what he was talking about. Dickens did not go deeply into anything, and least of all could he be expected to penetrate the dismal coil of American politics, but the intuition of genius told him at once that something was rotten somewhere. With Adams the knowledge of it had grown with boyhood, had become only the more clearly defined during his ministries abroad, and while he was President, and now, in his old age, it was preying upon his peace of mind. Hence, his use of such expressions as the following:

"At least ten dough-faced Democrats changed their votes from aye to no after the roll had been called through."

But on the whole he restrains his propensity to peevishness in a very manly way. The outbreaks are few, and of them all, the worst in this volume is a note against Romulus M. Saunders, as follows:

"There is not a more cankered or venomous reptile in the country."

Concerning which it is fair to say that his anger had not been aroused by abuse of himself, a species of persecution to which he was continually a victim, but by a violent invective against the Whigs, "which includes the whole compass of his [Saunders'] conceptions." Here, under date of May 21, 1842, we have a condensation of much of his life about that time; elegant extracts, verses, religion, politics, and letters of compliment and abuse:

"21st.—The chill north-eastern continues, but this day without rain. I wrote lines in the album of Anna Payne, Mrs. Madison's niece, and in the Boston Mercantile Journal, edited by a man characteristically called Sleeper, Mr. G. Brown has published, with a puff, my paraphrase of the first and second verses of the sixty-first chapter of Isaiah, written at his request. Not a day passes but I receive letters from the North, and sometimes the West, asking for an autograph and a scrap of poetry or of prose, and from the South almost daily, letters of insult, profane obscenity, and filth."

A very religious man, Mr. Adams is fond of reporting the sermon of each clergyman of note whom he happens to hear. Yet his searching remarks on these discourses prove him the reverse of bigoted. He appears to be a strong Christian, without bias in favor of any Church. That he was no atheist appears from his own statements, and the attacks made upon him by freethinkers, when he disclaimed the authorship of a translation of Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary, which had been edited by another J. Q. Adams, of Boston. In regard to his literary attainments, the liking for verse-making, which he deplores early in his lifelong diary, has not abandoned him. He is not only a famous public man, but editors and friends press about him for copies of his poetical efforts. Thus, on the 8th of September, 1841, he records that his poem on the "Wants of Man" has been republished in Washington from an Albany journal, and that he has given copies of it in his own handwriting to a list of people, some eight in number, hailing from all parts of the Union. Nevertheless, as a kind of moral counterpoise to these marks of public approbation, he frequently takes himself to task for the dullness of his wit and his feebleness of expression. Thus, of the habit of public speaking, he says that his cultivation of it is inadequate, his experience much interrupted, and his practice, "like everything about me," unsystematic, confused, and drowsy.

These are strong words written in a moment of depression, but they serve as another illustration of the proverb that "the race is not to the swift." In comparison with the array of ready speakers fostered in the United States during the first fifty years of this century, Adams may have had reason to bewail his inferior style. Yet he seems to have done more work than any three of the "magnetic speakers," and bids fair to be one of the most prominent names handed down as representative of that time.

The glimpses of Daniel Webster which Adams affords us only confirm the almost universal report of his character and acts. Utterly at variance with him in politics, Adams cannot help showing his respect for that great intellect, while he bitterly inveighs against his morals. Thus, in September of 1841, after he has made a strong speech favorable to Webster, he writes:

"I revised the proof-slips of my speech delivered on the 4th inst. on the McLeod resolution, the language of which, wholly extemporaneous, is mean and tautological, full of repetitions and desultory, but has the mérite de l'apropos. The speech has, for the time, saved Webster from the catastrophe which has befallen his colleagues. It has given him the means of saving himself from ruin and his country from a most disastrous war [with England.] My reward from him will be professions of respect and esteem, speeches of approbation and regard for me to my friends, knowing that they will be reported to me, secret and dean-laid intrigues against me, and still more venomous against my son. Such is human nature in the gigantic intellect, the envious temper, the ravenous ambition, and the rotten heart of Daniel Webster."

And when in June of 1843 President Tyler is brought by Webster to assist in celebrating the completion of the monument on Bunker Hill. Adams will not go to see it, since he has "an utter aversion to all pageants," and especially abhors this one, but stays at home and writes in his diary as follows:

"But now, with the ideal association of the thundering cannon, which I heard, and the smoke of burning Charlestown, which I saw, on that awful day, combined with the pyramid of Quincy granite, and Daniel Webster spouting, and John Tyler's nose, with a shadow outstretching that of the monumental column—how could I have witnessed all this at once, without an unbecoming burst of indignation, or of laughter? Daniel Webster is a heartless traitor to the cause of human freedom; John Tyler is a slave monger. What have these to do with the Quincy granite pyramid on the brow of Bunker's Hill? What have these to do with a dinner in Faneuil Hall, but to swill like swine, and grunt about the rights of man?"

Alas! poor Mr. Adams; it would have been far more appropriate that a survivor of the Revolution like yourself should have inaugurated that pile of granite! But it is easier to truckle than to fight, to sell one's self than to remain perversely poor, and above all, to listen to an unprincipled orator than to a stiff and somewhat prosy patriot.

As might be expected, poor Tyler does not receive much sympathy at the hands of the veteran Whig. He tells us that never since the Government existed was President so totally neglected. On New Year's Day of 1842 he credits the White House and not the President with attracting the crowd of visitors, which made so violent an irruption on the house of the Chief Magistrate that the doors had to be closed. This may be ill-tempered, even in a diary, but the fact nevertheless remains that Adams—in spite of the limited nature of his mind, which made such a diary possible—seldom gossips or retails malicious stories. Mrs. Tyler is only mentioned once, and then in a way which means no harm. He says of Caleb Cushing, that he "has taken a lover's leap over to the Tyler territory, and makes his court, (fait sa cour,) to the Lady Elizabeth."

Mr. Adams' frequent use of French terms is all the more remarkable from the fact that by nature he was the opposite to all that is French in mind and manners. He appears to have approached closer to the Quaker type both in manners and religious bent, having on the one side an antique stateliness and sobriety of manner, which represented well his quiet but inflexible opinions, and on the other no mean quantity of religious toleration. That he was not by any means wanting in human weaknesses he himself confesses, nay, rather obtrusively laments. But we have evidence, that in his old age he was also by no means wanting in appreciation of the fair sex. Late in the Autumn of 1843, he goes by appointment to Cincinnati, to lay the corner-stone of the Astronomical Observatory there, and his progress from Boston is a series of public ovations. At Cleveland the party is compelled to take to a canal boat (!)—that classic craft which so many American poets have sung in comic, and some in serious, vein. The discomforts of the slow Wintry journey are found to have been softened to the venerable ex-President by a Miss Charlotte Macy, "a handsome and amiable young woman, and Miss Langdon, of Buffalo, with fascinating manners." Perhaps it was the sprightly companionship of these charming persons, and the absence of Mrs. Adams, (for truth compels one to remember that Mr. Adams traveled, on that occasion, without his spouse,) which emboldened the old gentleman. For when the inhabitants of Akron insisted, as usual, in having him out to a hand-shaking, the following scenes took place:

"Among the women, a very pretty one, as I took her hand, kissed me on the cheek. I returned the salute, on the lip, and kissed every woman that followed, at which some made faces, but none refused."

At Covington, Ky., he has become a hardened sinner—or victim—for he notes such special favors from the other sex without one exclamation-point of surprise:

"A very pretty woman, as she took my hand, whispered, 'The first kiss in Kentucky,' which I did not refuse."

After these very pleasing signs of human nature in the old gentleman, one is surprised to find evidences of a Spartan brusqueness of behavior to persons who seek to testify their admiration of him in ways which the nicety of his scrupulousness will not admit. In January of 1844 the Banner Clay Committee of Baltimore present him with a flattering letter and a gold-headed cane. The former he accepts gratefully, but the latter he declines. On another occasion he accepts a small ivory cane with a flattering inscription, for a certain time only—that is, until what was known as the gag rule, for the abolition of which he had long been battling, should be finally done away with in Congress. But it was not only Clay Committees and private American citizens who sent him words of encouragement and approbation. The papers of June, 1843, contain honorary resolutions of the Anti-Slavery Convention held at London, which, he says, filled his soul with humility and fervent gratitude to God. He is also remembered in France, for Louis Philippe asks Gen. Cass "what in nature had got into Mr. Adams, with whom he recollected to have formed a very pleasing acquaintance in England, and whom he had ever since considered as a friend." When Gen. Cass asks him for an explanation, the good King says: "Why, he denies my title."

It appears that in one of Mr. Adams' numerous lectures, delivered before a literary society, he had said that Louis Philippe owned his crown neither by monarchical title of hereditary descent nor by the republican title of popular election. This the King had heard. The anecdote proves that either Adams was a very important person at the time, or that Louis Philippe was exceedingly sensitive, or possibly that the system of French foreign reports was very carefully organized.

In these years the increasing importance of the daily press is making itself felt. Mr. Adams is not kind to one of the reporters at Washington, "John Howard Payne, a confidential correspondent of James Gordon Bennett's New-York Herald," whom he states to be a poetical, dramatic, and political adventurer. The Herald is charged with fulsome adulation of President Tyler and unbounded abuse upon every member of the Cabinet. "This paper has, at the same time, had almost daily notices of me; sometimes minatorial, but for the last ten days nauseously flattering." Yet Adams nowhere objects to the press, nor defends the attacks of members of the House on reporters. On the 26th of January, 1844, he defends the reporter for the United States Gazette of Philadelphia against summary proceedings on the part of Charles J. Ingersoll, whose words and acts on a former occasion the reporter had correctly published. The day before this move on Ingersoll's part, Weller, of Ohio, egged on by Payne and Belser, of Alabama, had knocked down, beaten, and wounded another reporter because he had reported to the Baltimore Patriot some blackguard treatment of a member on the part of Weller. During the debate, another member, coming to Ingersoll's assistance, moved that no reporters should be admitted within the hall, except those for the city papers. A Georgian member moved that they should be appointed officers of the House, and only allowed to report certain specified things. Mr. Adams expresses his opinion that the ruffians of the House cannot bear the exposure of their villainies by the press, and that they combine with the Speaker to silence or smother its voice.

It is evident that Mr. Adams hopes nothing from the Democrats in the way of improvement or education. He thinks the people of the United States do not sufficiently estimate the importance of patronizing and promoting science as a principle of political action, while he directly charges the slave oligarchy with systematically struggling "to suppress all public patronage or countenance to the progress of the mind." It is also curious to note the first alarm sounded by Mr. Adams in regard to a Governmental freeing of the slaves by martial law. What brought the matter up was the debate on a bill seeking to reimburse Gen. Jackson for a fine laid upon him at New-Orleans in 1815. Judge Hall had decided that he must pay a fine for having declared martial law in New-Orleans illegally. Adams stated during the debates on reimbursing the General, that he might have freed the slaves of Louisiana at the same time, since the declaration of martial law gave him that right, as well as others. This was of course violently resented by speakers and pamphleteers on the slave side. It is curious merely from the fact that President Lincoln finally freed the slaves under similar circumstances, but on a more gigantic scale than Adams probably ever dreamed of.

A man who has been in public life for the greater part of a century may be assumed to know something about deliberative assemblies. John Quincy Adams was neither brilliant nor profound, and we find very little powerful generalizing in his diary. The present volume, however, contains one result of his experience which may be worth recording on account of its practical qualities. It is called by Mr. Adams in the somewhat pompous phraseology which his reading and early education had fostered, "a law of political gravitation."

"Aug. 29, 1842.—The progress of the tariff controversy exhibits a signal exemplification of what I have long and often remarked as a law of political gravitation, as uniform in its operation as that other gravitation which governs the system of the universe. It is that all great systems of policy maintained by antagonist parties and subject to deliberative decision, the opposite practical measures are modified into mutual approximation, till they come to a balance turned by a single vote."

Undoubtedly the formal and precise nature of Mr. Adams did him harm in the personal contact with fellow-members of Congress. Nothing was more calculated to irritate and exasperate the quick tempers and more liberal natures of the Congressmen of the South and South-west than the polished, and, it is very likely, pedantic utterances of this most worthy statesman. Andy Johnson, fresh from his free-and-easy cobbler shop of Tennessee, feels the influence at once, and instinctively aims his first speech at a man whom he no doubt would have liked in some respects to resemble. But the reader of his diary sees the pathetic side of Mr. Adams' character. He finds that he was conscious of want of that heat and light in his mind which made other men of inferior attainments and meagre brains not only effective, but liked. And old age is coming upon him with no hope in the future for a settlement of the questions which are eating the heart out of the Union. In March, 1844, he begins to despair:

"25th.—I approach the term when my daily journal must cease, from physical disability to keep it up. I have now struggled nearly five years without the interval of a day, while mind and body have been wearing away under the daily, silent, but unremitting erosion of time. I arose this morning at 4, and with smarting, bloodshot eye and shivering hand still sat down and wrote to fill up the chasm of the closing days of the last week; but my stern cease after time is, to borrow a simile from Tom Paine, like the race of a man with a wooden leg after a horse."

It is sad enough, if one can put one's self in the place of Mr. Adams, but to do so requires something of an effort. The war which has taken place seems to have separated those times from ours with very much the same kind of gulf that lies between childhood and manhood. The days of puerilities in political elections, such as the old Democratic campaigns against the Whigs had to show, are fortunately past. But if one does cross over to the old shore, the spectacle of Mr. Adams is wholesome and satisfactory. It is pleasant to see a man thoroughly in earnest without being fanatical, a man of unquestioned uprightness of character, who yielded neither to the extreme disunionists and cold-water Temperance men on the one side, nor the temptations to Democratic popularity on the other; a man who, without brilliant parts, so used his talents during a long life of study and travel that he was able to please the people of his day by literary and historical disquisitions, while he contended in Congress against the evil growths which no Administration had been able or willing to cut out of the Union. The country has too few capable and faithful servants such as he. When they are found no brusqueness of manner or sturdy independence of thought should keep Americans from securing their services.

The long list of volumes which constitute this Diary cannot rank as a history. The style is too colorless; there is too much left out and very often too little of the really important brought in. Though there can be little doubt that Mr. Adams always expected his Diary to be published, yet that has not succeeded in making it generally interesting. It's value is that of a book of reference, to which the student of a certain year of the rather dreary and exceedingly intricate history of our country may turn, in order to see what the plain, upright mind of Mr. Adams thought of that period. But as a book of reference, its value will depend a good deal upon its editing. Without a full and even minute index, half its usefulness will be lost. We may expect, therefore, that the close of the series will be marked by the appearance of a thoroughly digested key to all the persons, places, and events mentioned by John Quincy Adams.

THE MENZIES LIBRARY.

There is now on exhibition at the salesrooms of Leavitt & Co., Clinton Hall, one of the most remarkable collections of books ever offered for sale in this country. Mr. William Menzies, to whose expenditure and indefatigable industry book-lovers are indebted for this rare exhibit, has resolved to part with a library which is the product of years of loving labor. Of the 2,000 lots here catalogued, not one can be reckoned as "book trash." Many are uncommonly fine, or rare, and a few are absolutely unique. One striking peculiarity of this collection, and one which will allure the virtuoso, is the fine condition and beauty of the works. The collector has evidently been at great pains to make each copy a perfect one, though he may have been obliged to sacrifice two or three in order to produce one from them. In the matter of bindings the most fastidious taste has been exercised; no expense has been spared, and many of the lots are simply luxurious and sumptuous in dress and appearance. Rare and curious plates, autographs, and maps are inserted in many of the books, and to accomplish this labor of love, one would suppose that the portfolios of innumerable collectors had been ransacked. One of the most prominent features of this library is that relating to bibliography. Not only literary history, but typography, illumination, engraving, and the mechanism of printing, are all amply represented. Beginning with rare and perfect missals and books of honors, works of the fourth century, we are able to trace the art down through successive generations, to the perfect pages of the best modern printing. Of the early printers there are several rare and fine examples. Guttenberg is represented by one title, and Faust and Schoiffer and Peter Schoiffer respectively by one each. A beautiful copy of Higden's Polycronycon bears the famous imprint and colophon of William Caxton, the father of English printing. His son-in-law and successor, Wynkyn de Worde, is represented by a perfect copy of Cicero's Book of Offices, and by an exquisite copy of Fyssher's Penitential Psalms. Of early printing in America there are some fine examples, of which one of the most notable is Eliot's Indian Bible, in perfect condition. As this is said to be the first Bible printed in America, it has a two-fold charm for collectors. It is a matter of common notoriety that only one man in the world is able to read this wonderful book, and there runs a dreadful rumor that he has forgotten the language, though nobody is able to prove it. Davenport's Discourse About Civil Government, printed at Cambridge, Mass., in 1663, is another venerable relic of colonial times, preserved in admirable shape. The second book printed in Boston, Hubbard's Indian Wars, dated 1677, bound up with a discourse by the same author, which was printed a year earlier, and is the first, is a rare specimen. The first book printed in Philadelphia was Leeds' Temple of Wisdom for the Little World, which bears the imprint of William Bradford, 1688. The copy in this library is thought to be unique. A copy of the first New-York book, Lingard's Letter of Advice to a Young Gentleman, printed by Bradford, in 1696, is further enriched by an autograph of the printer inserted. A Confession of Faith, being the original Saybrook Platform, printed by John Foster, New-London, 1680, has the honor of being the first book printed in Connecticut. Of William Bradford's works, (the first printing in the middle Colonies,) there are fifty examples, and "B. Franklin the printer," is represented by more than twenty titles, the most famous of which is a copy of his Cato Major, a book which he is said to have taken to England with him as a specimen of American colonial printing. Among the works strictly relating to bibliography, a magnificent set of Dibdin stands pre-eminent. The volumes are uniform in size, richly bound, and perfect in every respect. The sentimental and reverential old bibliophile could not have asked for himself a more appropriate monument than this admirable series, preserved and dressed with the loving care which he affected toward all that is rare and curious in the art of book-making. Of the other writers in this branch of literature, Brunet, Watts, Brydges, Harrisse, and others, are fully represented. The Bibliographia Grenvilliana is on large paper, and is an uncommonly fine copy. Besides a large collection of historical portraits, engraved by eminent masters, the collection contains some of the best works known to collectors, the volumes of Lodge and St. Memins being among the number. Early Scotch and English editions of Burns and Scott are also among the interesting modern books.

As Mr. Menzies' explorations extended over a period when the rage for collecting Americana was high, his library shows fine results in this direction. Books of early voyages to the North American Continent are numerous. Some of these are rare and curious, and all of them are in good condition. There are three editions of Peter Martyr's Historie of the East and West Indies, of which Hakluyt's, 1628, is a remarkably fine copy. Hakluyt's collections of voyages and discoveries are also here in all their original perfection and beauty. There is also a fine copy of De Bry's Voyages and Peregrinations, and Purchas' Pilgrims, Hamor's True Discourse of Virginia, and many other curious tomes, attest the industry of the collector. In American colonial history the library is uncommonly rich. The works of Cotton Mather and Increase Mather, Morton's New English Canaan, Bullock's Virginia, New-England's First Fruits, Thomas' Account of Pennsylvania, Bond's Publick Trial of the Quakers, and several curious tracts on the Salem witchcraft, are among the rarities of this department of history. Such fiery epistles as Roger Williams' Bloudy Tenent, and Mather's Bloudy Tenent Washed, are interesting examples of the religious controversial literature of 1644 and 1647. It is noticeable, however, that sundry modern works have as companions a great number of bound pamphlets which were the results of a sharp controversy provoked by the book which they follow. In this way Bancroft's History of the United States draws after it a mass of tracts produced by the historic wrangle over his ninth volume. Among the interesting relics of the revolutionary war will be noticed the original manuscript order-book of Gen. Wayne, written at Valley Forge, and still showing a vivid example of the old hero's handwriting. A poem by the hapless André, called "The Cow Chace," in which is celebrated a comic incident of the war, is appropriately bound up with a tragedy on the subject of André, "performed at New-York in 1798." Of the autographs in this collection, those known as the Reed letters of Washington are the most valuable. During the siege of Boston, and for some years thereafter, Washington wrote quite regularly to Gen. Joseph Reed, of Pennsylvania. The letters, which have been religiously preserved, enter largely into the works of Sparks, Irving, and others. They cover a period in which some of the most momentous events of the war occurred. This invaluable collection descended to the late William B. Reed, of Philadelphia, and from him passed into the possession of Mr. Menzies. The letters are fifty-four in number, nearly all of them on foolscap paper, written in the formal, precise hand of Washington, only one or two being in the handwriting of a clerk. Although it must be confessed that the Father of his Country was sometimes a little shaky in his orthography, the penmanship is faultless and characteristic. Nowadays, a series of letters from a great living public man would probably be written in the mechanical hand of a stenographer, or, worse yet, disguised in the vulgarity of a "type writer." These remarkable letters should not be suffered to be hidden in a private library. They should become the property of the nation and kept with the national relics of Washington.

Curiosity-seekers, however, will be most attracted by the wonderful edition of Irving's Washington which graces this library. Putnam's well-known five-volume edition, 16mo., is here given on large paper, "a rivulet of text meandering through a meadow of margin." But by insertions and inlayings innumerable, the work is expanded to ten volumes 4to, with two small tenders containing a manuscript copy of one of the chapters of the life in Irving's delicate handwriting and Tuckerman's Character and Portraits of Washington. Independent of the fine engravings originally contained in this work, the volumes have been enriched by nearly two thousand plates. Of these, more than two hundred are portraits of Washington, and eight hundred are of his associates and contemporaries. Autographs of Washington and his Generals, and of noted British and American military men and statesmen connected with the history of the time are also inserted, and many drawings, engraved views, photographs and etchings, make up this most unique monument of industry and taste.

The library is to be sold at auction next week, beginning on Monday, and continuing until the whole is disposed of. It is a pity that such a good collection should not be kept together, but the fates have ordered its dispersion. The catalogue, which is a handsome octavo, is a fine specimen of the typographic art, and is compiled by Mr. Joseph Sabin. His name on the title-page is ample guarantee of the faithfulness and intelligence with which the work has been performed.

THE TREASURER OF NORTH CAROLINA.

State Treasurer D. A. Jenkins of North Carolina, has tendered his resignation, to take effect on the 22d inst., and it is understood that Gov. Brogden will appoint the successful candidate at the late election to fill the vacancy. Mr. Jenkins says that only one of the county Sheriffs has rendered his account of the State taxes, owing to the difficulty in making collections. Previous to 1869 the settlements of Sheriffs were completed by Sept. 30, the close of the fiscal year, and the Treasurer was thus enabled to have all his books and accounts ready for inspection by the committee of the General Assembly, as well as for a transfer, with the effects of the office, to his successor on the succeeding 1st of January. Mr. Jenkins adds: "I do not, at the last moment, shrink from a responsibility that has been endured for more than eight years past, but the brief time that elapses from the meeting of the General Assembly to the 1st of January will not, in all probability, in view of the financial embarrasments of the people, be sufficient for the Sheriffs to complete their settlements. In view of all the circumstances, these settlements should be supervised by one officer. Again, my successor will be afforded an opportunity of consulting with the committees of the General Assembly, especially that on Finance, and of becoming familiar with the needs of the Treasury, so as to aid in devising means of raising revenue. After a service of nearly eight and a half years to the people of the State in the midst of trying times in the State's history, I lay down my office with the consciousness of having always endeavored to discharge fully the duty which the laws imposed on me, and I am pleased to believe that the verdict of the people is in accord with this expression."

HOW A NAME WAS CHANGED.

The Hartford Courant says: "Mr. Minor A. Strong is the Republican Representative from Warren. Mr. Strong is an old soldier of the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, and a farmer of fine position in his town. Mr. Strong, by a curious play of words, gets into the papers as 'Mr. —— Minor.' It evidently came about by such a dispatch as this: 'Representative Minor; a strong Republican,' in which the comma was put after the first word instead of the third."

THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE.

HOW A PRESIDENT IS CHOSEN.

PAST AND PRESENT LAWS AND THE CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION ON THE SUBJECT—THE DEMOCRATIC DEFEAT OF SENATOR MORTON'S BILL.

Never before in the history of the United States has there been a national election so closely contested as the present one, and the good-nature now pervading the crowds which manifest the general and deep interest in the result by densely thronging the hotels, the committee rooms, and the neighborhood of the newspaper bulletins, but scantily conceals the almost immeasurable misfortune of a disputed election to the Presidency. War and ruin have repeatedly followed such disputes in the South American Republics, and, though the temperament of our people and the wisdom of our rulers form a sufficient protection against such disasters in the present emergency, yet it is to be regretted that there does not exist any law to definitely control the action of Vice President Ferry when, on the second Wednesday of February, and in the presence of the assembled Congress, he proceeds to count the electoral vote. But though there is no directly controlling law, there are a few precedents, and of them a slight sketch will be given.

Notwithstanding that not a few enlightened voters were heard to complain on Tuesday last that the names of neither Hayes nor Tilden were to be found on the ballots provided, every citizen is supposed to know that when he casts his vote for a President and Vice President, he does not vote for those officers directly, but for a body of men called the Electoral College, and composed of a number of electors from each State equal to its total representation in both the Senate and the House. And to prevent the person in office at the time of the election from having any improper influence on his re-election, by his ordinary official powers, it is provided that no person holding any office of profit or of trust under the United States shall be an Elector, and in no other respect does the Constitution define the Elector's qualifications. These Electors meet at the capitols of their respective States on the first Wednesday in December, and vote by ballot for a President and Vice President, at least one of whom must not be an inhabitant of the same State with the Electors. The ballots for the two officers must be separate, and distinct lists of all persons voted for as President and as Vice President, are signed, sealed, certified, and transmitted to Washington, directed to the President of the Senate, who, in the presence of both houses of Congress, opens all the certificates on the second Wednesday in February succeeding every meeting of the Electors; "and the votes shall then be counted." A majority of the votes of the whole Electoral College is necessary to a choice, and if no candidate has a majority, then from the persons on the list of those voted for as President, not exceeding three, and having the highest number of votes, the House of Representatives proceeds immediately to choose a President by ballot—"immediately" being construed to mean any time before the 4th day of the following March. In this latter mode of choosing the President, the votes are taken by States, the representation from each State having a single ballot. A majority of all the States is necessary to a choice, and a quorum consists of a member or members from two-thirds of the States. Finally, if the House does not choose a President when the duty devolves upon it, then the Vice President acts as President, as in case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President. Vice Presidents are chosen in a precisely similar manner.

It is not now intended to discuss the wisdom of this plan, though we are told by the Federalist that the reason of its enactment was the opinion of the framers of the Constitution that the choice of several to form an intermediate body of electors was much less apt to convulse the community than the choice of one, who should himself be the final object of the public wishes. But however wise the plan may be in principle, it is certainly defective in practice. To pass over less obvious but equally fatal objections, it is nowhere provided what agent shall count the electoral votes, nor by what rules that agent shall be guided in its decision as to their regularity. In the case of questionable votes and so close an election as the present, this power may obviously be all-important. On this point it is the opinion of Chancellor Kent that, in the absence of legislative provision, the President of the Senate counts the vote, and determines the result, and that the houses are present merely as spectators, to witness the fairness and accuracy of the transaction, and to act only in case it is declared that no choice is made by the Electors. Such, too, was the practice, and the first difficulty which arose was in 1857, when objection was made to receiving the vote of Wisconsin, upon the ground that the electors had not cast their votes on the day fixed by law, having been prevented by a snowstorm, although the vote was cast on the next day; but Mr. Mason, of Virginia, the President of the Senate, decided that the objection was not in order, and that nothing was in order but to count the votes. His decision created great excitement and much discussion at the time, as the precedent thus set, if pushed to its extreme, gave one man the dangerous power of seriously modifying, if not of actually defeating, the popular will. Nevertheless, his action prevailed, and was not repudiated or condemned by either house. The law, too, was not changed until January, 1865, when the twenty-second joint rule for the government of the proceedings of the houses was adopted. By that rule, if a vote was objected to, each house withdrew and considered it, without debate and voted upon it. If either house sustained the objection, the vote was not counted. This was certainly a crude way of treating the case. The objection might be arbitrary and sustained for partisan reasons alone, and under its operation a State might be deprived of its vote in the Electoral College. The temptation to the House of Representatives, moreover, to raise factious objections was very great, because if by such means it was made impossible for any one candidate to have a majority, the election would go to the House for decision. But vicious as was this mode of arbitrament, it was at least a mode, and one which might, in certain not impossible contingencies, avoid difficulties of a very serious character. How the rule operated was shown in February, 1873, when objection was made to counting the vote of Arkansas, because the certificate signed by the Governor was not attested by the seal of the State. Upon this objection the two houses voted separately. The House of Representatives overruled the objection, but the Senate sustained it, and the vote of Arkansas was lost. Objection was made also to counting certain votes from the State of Georgia, which were cast for Horace Greeley, upon the ground that Mr. Greeley was dead. This objection was overruled by the Senate and sustained by the House, and so those votes were not counted. By the precedent thus set, it became clear that it was within the power of either house by mere inaction, by simply refusing to overrule an objection, to disfranchise any State, or all the States, on a trivial or even immaterial pretext.

At that time both branches of Congress were strongly Republican, and it was therefore solely in the interest of justice and order that Senator Morton introduced an amendment to the joint rule, providing that no electoral vote should be rejected unless by the concurrent action of both houses, and afterward reported a bill from the Committee on Privileges and Elections embracing this amendment and providing for a limited debate in each house upon any objection that might be offered to electoral votes. This bill, after much debate, passed the Senate by a large majority, but was not reached in the House for want of time. At the last session of Congress he again brought forward the bill, and it again passed the Senate. On its second passage it became nearly a party question, receiving only two Democratic votes, those of Senators Thurman, of Ohio, and Merrimon, of North Carolina. After the passage, and before the bill was sent to the House, Senator Thurman made a motion to reconsider the vote, and upon this motion no action was afterward taken, the action of the Democratic members of the Senate making it certain that the House would reject the bill. And so it failed the second time, although Senator Morton had demonstrated that it would be quite within the bounds of possibility for forty-five members of the House, controlling the votes of nineteen States and representing only about one-fifth of the people of the country, to determine the choice of a President. This was an extreme case, but it showed how easily a President might be chosen in strict conformity with the rule, and who should have yet received but a small minority of the popular vote.

The defeat of the bill was due to Democratic inaction in the House, but to the action of the Senate it is due that even a still denser fog does not surround the subject. For some doubt exists, or rather did exist, as to the nature and force of these joint rules, although the better opinion is that given by Senator Morton to the effect that they are simply agreements between the two houses for methods of action in regard to particular matters, and necessarily expire with each Congress. One Congress cannot make such rules binding upon a succeeding Congress, but as they generally pertain to matters about which there is no dispute, they have been usually accepted by a new Congress without readoption, and acted upon by common consent, with the perfect understanding, however, that it is in the power of either house to dissent from any one or all of them. At the last session the Senate, by resolution, expressly dissented from the twenty-second joint rule, thus taking away any argument of assent or adoption that might be drawn from mere silence. The matter now stands as if no such rule had ever been in existence, and unless further action is had by Congress before the day fixed for counting the votes in February, the count will have to be made under the provision of the Constitution as they have been above outlined.

This position is supported by prominent men of all parties. Senator Bayard, an authority which will hardly be disputed by Democrats, expressed his opinion in the debate of the 13th of March last, that "concurrence of the House was not essential," after the Senate had rescinded the rule. Senator Thurman alluded to the rule as "abolished." Mr. McMillan, (Liberal,) of Minnesota, declared that the joint rule had "been repealed," and Mr. Morton, that Congress "had no rule." The power of counting and announcing the electoral vote, therefore, seems to remain where the Constitution placed it, that is in the hands of the President of the Senate, and as that officer is not now a Democrat, that party has to fear the sting of its own action, and there is grave reason to fear that if objection should be made, next February, to the counting of a sufficient number of votes to prevent either of the candidates receiving a majority, there would instantly arise pretensions, based on grounds of a certain plausibility, which no human tribunal could decide, and which would have to be disposed of, if at all, by an incredible degree of wisdom and forbearance on both sides.

THE BOSTON LATIN SCHOOL.

A CENTENNIAL CELEBRATED BY ITS ALUMNI—SPEECHES BY MR. RALPH WALDO EMERSON AND HON. WILLIAM M. EVARTS.

On Wednesday evening last about one hundred of the Alumni of the Boston Latin School observed the centennial anniversary of the reopening of the school by Master Lovell after the evacuation of Boston by the British. There were present in the evening many distinguished gentlemen who received education in this school, among them Rev. E. E. Hale, President of the evening; Hon. William M. Evarts, of New-York; Wendell Phillips, Ralph Waldo Emerson, President Eliot, of Harvard College; Hon. Charles Hale, ex-Chief Justice Charles S. Bradley, of Rhode Island; E. H. Derby, Rev John T. Sargent, Rev. James Freeman Clarke, Prof. J. Henry Thayer, and others. The dinner was served at seven o'clock, and it was not until nearly nine that the intellectual exercises began with a pleasant speech from Rev. Mr. Hale, who then introduced Mr. Ralph Waldo Emerson. Mr. Emerson said:

"I dare not attempt to say anything to you, because, in my old age, I am forgetting the word that I should speak. I can't remember anybody's name, not even my recollections of the Latin School. I have therefore guarded against absolute silence by bringing you a few reminiscences which I have written. [Applause.] When I entered the Latin School, nine or ten years old, William Bigelow was master. The school-house was very old and shabby, and it was decided to pull it down and rebuild it on the same ground. In wintering, the scholars were removed to the old wooden block on the Milldam, and soon after to a loft on Pemberton Hill. You need not seek for the places, for you cannot find them. One was where the Boston and Maine depot now stands, and the other was where Scollay's Building stood, now called Tremont row. We are now coming to the new school-house, rebuilt where the Parker House now stands. In Mr. William Bigelow's reign, the boys discovered his habit of drinking, and one day, when he was giving orders to the boys on one side of the school, there was a sudden shout from the opposite side. He turned round amazed to them, and instantly the boys on the eastern side roared aloud. I have never known any rebellion like this in the English schools to surpass it. I think the school was immediately dismissed, and I think Mr. Bigelow did not enter the school again. I remember that on the following morning the prayer was simply these words: 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.' A few days afterward the School Committee, Mr. Bulfinch, the famous architect who built our State-house and the Capitol at Washington; Mr. Thacher, Mr. Wells, and the rest of the committee, if there were more, or their friends, came to school and introduced Mr. Benjamin Gould as the new master. Mr. Thacher addressed us, and expressed every confidence in the high merit of Mr. Gould as a scholar and a gentleman, and congratulated the boys upon his appointment. As soon as the committee took their hats and turned to the door, the boys began to buzz their opinion of the new master in low tones. Mr. Gould turned around to them and lifted his finger to command silence, which was instantly obeyed, and from that moment he ruled. He was an excellent master and loved a good scholar, and waked his ambition. Frederick Percival Leverett was at the head of my class, and long afterward the master of the school. William Foster Otis, son of Harrison Gray Otis, was another member of the class. George A. Otis, Edward G. Loring, now Judge at Washington; John Gardner, Theodore Russell, of Cambridge—these names are still known to you. Mr. Gould in his first year waked the ambition of the boys to found a school library, which was immediately set on foot and grew rapidly. Mr. Gould valued good speaking, and Saturday morning was devoted to it. He waked the ambition of the boys to do. He did not forget his scholars when they entered college, but came to see them there, and especially if he found that they were losing ground in any department of study. Mr. Gould one day informed the school that there was a rumor that the British Government was going to send a hostile fleet to Boston Harbor, and that a gentleman had desired that the boys of the school should give one day to assist in throwing up defenses on Noddle Island, and that all who were ready and willing to go should be at the bottom of Hanover street the next day at 9 o'clock, when a boat would be in waiting to carry them to the island. The whole school went. I went, [applause,] but I confess that I can't remember a stroke of work [laughter] which I or my school-fellows accomplished. [Renewed laughter.] Whether the news of this action on the part of the Latin school reached England and decided their Government to sue for peace, I have never learned." [Applause and laughter.]

Wendell Phillips was then introduced, and after giving interesting reminiscences of the old Latin School, criticised the present common school system, which, he thought, with all its boasted advantages, was yet faulty.

Hon. William M. Evarts was the next speaker, and on being introduced by the Chairman he was received with great applause. He spoke substantially as follows:

"I received the invitation of the committee with the greatest pleasure. It seemed to me an occasion that must necessarily be very delightful. I expected to see some of my schoolmates, some of the members of my old class in the school, that I had hardly met since we parted at the school; and I expected to see many of the eminent men of Boston, older than myself, and many of the young and promising men that had hitherto been unknown to me. I have been a little disappointed in not seeing some of my classmates here whom I had expected to meet, but otherwise I am not at all disappointed. I supposed the assemblage would be as free and natural and simple as a collection of school-boys always is and always will be, however old they are, if they meet as schoolmates, and I am not disappointed. [Applause.] All that I can notice of variety in the aspects that you present from the traditional one of school-boys' shining morning faces is, that I see the shining evening faces. [Laughter.] I think Mr. Leverett had charge of the school at the time that I entered it, in 1828. I remained in the school as long as he did, till 1831, when he left to open a private school on a higher standard of scholarship, and with a larger rate of charge for tuition than had hitherto been known in Boston. This school of ours had up to that time, pretty much monopolized the scholarship and educational advantages of the city. Unable, in the circumstances of my family, if I had otherwise desired, to leave a free school to join Mr. Leverett's at the high rate of tuition, he was kind enough to suggest to my mother, who was then a widow, that he would be glad to have me as one of his pupils without any other charge than that of a free school. And it is to that circumstance I had the benefit of further instruction from that distinguished scholar in his own school; but I also suffered the loss—which I have always regretted—that I cannot claim to be a graduate, and that I have lost the Franklin medal of the Latin School. As, however, I went to the Latin School with a Franklin medal from the Derne Street Grammar School, I am not so disconsolate. [Applause.] My life at school was a very happy one. I know nothing more regular, more scholarly, and, in school days, more completely limited to learning and reciting lessons. Four times a day, back and forth, I passed from School street to Pinckney street, varying the route a little by passing the Park street corner of the Common, or going around Beacon street, where the Athenæum is, down to School street. Four times a day, every week day, accompanied almost always down or returning from school by one or more schoolmates. And as far as I recollect, there was very little thought of influence over the scholars, behind that of instruction and discipline in learning. I cannot recall any influence upon the souls or morals that was exerted by the school, except by the association of ingenuous boys of good social position and influence at home. I should think the school was wholly occupied with the teaching of lessons and the hearing of them, and with instruction in composition and in declamation. We have had in this country some schools that have brought to bear upon the children committed to them more of that high and important and enduring influence—what we all associate with the name of 'Arnold' in England. [Applause.] No doubt a school like the Latin School, where the boys all live at home, and where all the influence, moral and religious, is secured to them, precisely that kind of influence and authority that I have referred to is not expected and may not be imparted; but from what I have heard said here to-night, I imagine that, since my time, there has perhaps been more of that influence on the part of masters over the scholars than during my period. There was not very much need of punishment, and I don't think punishment was administered when it was not needed during my experience with the school. All my recollections of Boston are of the pleasantest kind. When I left for college—I went to New-Haven—my vacations were spent in Boston; but finally, when I left the law school, I chose New-York for the practice of my profession and for my home. Since then I have not seen so much of Boston as I would like. I have been too busy, I suppose. At any rate, the lines of my travel in Summer don't carry me through Boston, and in Winter there is not any reason to come to Boston. [Laughter.] But how about education? I agree with Mr. Phillips that the common school has run a little away from what was the true New-England conception of its service to the State, and whether it can ever be brought back—it is the return, the regression, the revocation of a step that is difficult. In this, as in all of her matters, we can always go on and destroy and then rebuild. But whether we can regress is the difficulty. As for the service of education, I suppose there will always be a controversy whether discipline or acquisition is the principal object. To my mind it has always been clear that discipline was the main object of education. [Applause.] As I have felt in my own experience as a scholar, and have always endeavored to teach my boys, that if a young person can be taught to do well what they don't wish to do at all, then you may trust them to do well pleasant and easy things that they prefer. [Applause;] and if they lose this as a fundamental discipline in those school days, there is no hard discipline, even in real life, that can repair the mischief that they have suffered. It would seem to me, therefore, that discipline we had at the Latin School. I certainly was taught to say in the most perfect manner the longest list of Latin nouns and prepositions that I didn't wish to learn at all, and became intimately acquainted in their whole pedigree and relation with large sums and words that I never expected to meet in my subsequent life at all; but having learned that, I could learn other things very easily. Now, the first thought, as it seems to me, of so many graceful seminaries for girls and boys is that the teachers not only do the teaching, but do the learning as well. I never could see any good reason for making so many new Latin grammars. I wish my boys could have such a grammar as I had, and if they learned it as well as I did they would have learned a great deal more toward the mysteries of Latin than from the improper instruction in the large grammars that they now have." [Applause.]

THE COTTON CROP.

REPORTS FROM VARIOUS STATES—A HEAVY FALLING OFF IN THE YIELD.

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 10.—The following is the Cotton Exchange crop report for October:

Louisiana.—We have fifty-seven replies from twenty-nine parishes, of the average date of Oct. 30. The weather has been generally dry, and more favorable for harvesting than last year. A killing frost is reported from the 1st to the 10th of October; a few exceptions reported "no killing frost yet." The damage from this cause to top crop and young cotton is from two to twenty per cent., but we find four per cent. on the whole a fair deduction. It appears that eighty per cent. of the cotton crop has been picked, and while some have finished already, picking generally will not be completed before the latter part of November. The yield is estimated at twenty-four per cent. less than last year. A few of our correspondents, remote from each other, note the fact that the yield of lint in proportion to the seed is much less than last year. They attribute this to the long dry season.

Mississippi.—We have received reports from twenty-seven counties, dated Oct. 30 to Nov. 2. The weather since Oct. 1 has been dry and favorable for the crop; more so than last year. A severe frost took place Oct. 1 and 2, killing the top crops in nearly every county under review. Only one report was received from Yazoo County, stating that no damage had been done by the frost. The aggregate damage by frost is reported to be fourteen per cent. Picking has progressed rapidly. Seventy-five per cent. of the crop is reported as out of the field, and the rest will be picked, according to thirty reports, by the 15th of November; according to thirty reports by the 1st of December; according to seven reports by the 15th of December, and according to two reports by the 31st of December. The yield, as compared with last year's, is reported to fall short twenty-five per cent. on an average, owing to overflows in some counties, and drought and early frost in all of them.

Arkansas.—Our report is compiled from thirty-nine answers received from nineteen counties, of the average date of Oct. 31. The weather has been generally warm and dry, decidedly more favorable for picking than during the same time last year. Killing frosts are reported in every county, in some as early as Oct. 1, and others not before the 16th. The damage from this cause is estimated at twenty-five per cent. Picking has progressed very rapidly, sixty per cent. of the crop being reported picked at the date of our answers, and the remainder will be gathered by the 1st of December. The yield, in comparison with last year, shows a heavy falling off, an average decrease of fully thirty-eight per cent., owing to prolonged drought and killing frost.

NORFOLK, Nov. 10.—The following report by the Cotton Exchange of the condition of the cotton crop is compiled from thirty-two replies from seventeen counties in North Carolina and three replies from Virginia: Thirteen report weather good and more favorable for picking than last year; ten replies report about the same, and twelve favorable; all report frost about the 15th of October; sixteen report not much damage done by frost, while nineteen say much injury has been done to the crop; twenty report three-quarters of the crop as picked and will finish picking by the last of November, while eleven say about two-thirds of the crop has been picked and will finish picking about the last of December; ten report the yield better than last year, six about the same, and nineteen report it from ten to twenty per cent. decrease. There is not much top cotton this year.

THE HOSTILE SAVAGES.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF LIEUT. GEN. SHERIDAN TO GEN. SHERMAN ON THE SURRENDER TO COL. MILES YELLOWSTONE—GEN. SHERMAN'S REPLY.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—The following official account of the Indian surrender to Col. Miles has been received here at the head-quarters of the Army, by telegraph from Chicago:

Gen. W. T. Sherman, Washington, D. C.:

Over four hundred lodges of hostile Indians, belonging to the Missouri River Agencies, surrendered to Col. Miles, Fifth Infantry, at a point on the Yellowstone, opposite Cabin Creek, giving five of the principal chiefs and head men as hostages for the delivery of arms, ponies, men, women, and children at the Cheyenne Agency on Dec. 2, 1876. Sitting Bull, with his small band of thirty lodges, escaped, going in the direction of the Dry Forks of the Missouri River, Col. Miles in pursuit. He attacked the Indians north of the Yellowstone on the 21st of October, driving them out of their camps and killing five. The Indians fled toward the Yellowstone, Col. Miles pursuing until the 27th, when the surrender above described took place.

Gen. Crook and Col. Mackenzie leave Fort Fetterman to-day or to-morrow to hunt up the Northern Cheyennes and Crazy Horse's band of Ogallallas from Red Cloud Agency, and if successful, which I do not doubt, the Sioux war, and all other Indian wars of any magnitude in this country, will be at an end forever.

P. H. SHERIDAN, Lieutenant General.

To the foregoing dispatch Gen. Sherman to-day telegraphed to Gen. Sheridan the following reply:

Your dispatch of yesterday is received, and I congratulate you and all concerned on the prospect of closing this Sioux war at this critical point. Gen. Miles has displayed his usual earnestness and energy, and I hope he will crown his success by capturing or killing Sitting Bull and his remnant of outlaws. I infer that Gen. Hazen has reached Fort Peck, and it may be that his presence there will assist Gen. Miles materially in his pursuit. Should Gen. Crook be as successful with Crazy Horse, and if we could collect all the Sioux on the Missouri River as near Fort Randall as possible, disarmed and dismounted, it would reduce itself to a simple question of feeding them till they learn to raise some food for themselves. Meantime, miners and settlers will fill up north of Laramie and about the Black Hills, so that these troublesome Indians would be hemmed in, and would gradually become like those in Minnesota.

W. T. SHERMAN, General.

NAVY ORDERS.

Carson to the Naval Academy; Midshipmen Thomas D. Griffin, William H. Allen, and Richard Henderson, to the Essex; Assistant Surgeon Millard H. Crawford to the Naval Hospital, Navy-yard, Mare Island; Passed Assistant Engineer William A. Windsor to the Ranger; Assistant Surgeon Howard Smith is detached from the Naval Hospital, Navy-yard, Mare Island, and placed on waiting orders; Cadet Engineers Henry H. Stevens, Robert J. Reid, and William B. Dunning, from the Essex and ordered to the Ranger at Wilmington, Del.

CHAMPAGNE MANUFACTURE

MILLIONS OF BOTTLES OF WINE.

A VISIT TO THE POMMERY CAVES—THE BOTTLING TIME—HOW THE SEDIMENT IS GOTTEN RID OF—THE SWEETENING PROCESS—THIS YEAR'S VINTAGE.

A correspondent of the London Telegraph writes from Reims: "The proprietors of the Pommery champagne manufactory were lucky enough to possess themselves some years ago of a deserted chalk quarry, and out of this have been constructed, with very slight additions and fortifications, some of the finest—if not the very finest—cellars in the champagne district. These are interesting apart from the use to which they have been put in this instance, for geologists tell one that in the very self-same wave of chalk the sub-marine tunnel between England and France will one day be made. The ease with which these subterranean passages have been modeled, the solidity of their appearance, and their kindly disposition to the contact and assistance of brick supports, may well inspire the talented engineers of both countries with new hope and courage. It must be remembered that the maker of champagne requires immense storage rooms. The juice of the grape comes to him in barrels; it leaves him after an elaborate process of manufacture in bottles, and in those alone is champagne perfected for the market. This delicate wine does not require cellars in the ordinary and accepted use of the term alone. They must be deep; they must be spacious; they must be capable of maintaining a proper temperature; they must not be cramped, cabined, or confined, but lordly, vast, and, before all things, high. So, thanks to characteristic energy and a liberal supply of capital, the water was finally pumped out of the abandoned pit, the intersecting tunnels were made, the arches were shored up, the flaws and faults in the chalk were patched, the floors were simply concreted, and now as they stand the Pommery caves are the best possible example of the enterprise of commerce, and as good a locality as could be found for showing the general process by which grape juice is made into champagne. When we have done admiring the garden, and the decorative devices of the outer ornamental walls, a wide door opens, extensive enough to admit a Lord Mayor's Show, banners, men in armor, and all, and the visitor to the Pommery caves is introduced to the first cellar. Although this is on what may be called the ground floor, and is rather a chais than a cave, the enormous space is deliciously cool. It is, in fact, a vast hall; the burning sun is carefully kept out; the temperature is jealously regulated; the windows are high and small, and there is a sense about one of a pleasant coolness, and not of any shuddering chill. At the extreme end of the hall are the offices and the visitors' waiting-rooms, but they occupy but a very little of the main space, which is devoted to the barrels of wine which are undergoing the necessary process of fermentation before they are carried to a lower depth, and the bottling commences for the year. Into this place the casks of juice are brought straight from the presses in the vineyards, and in this huge Westminster or Guildhall of Champagne stands the mighty vat or cuve in which the various kinds are amalgamated, and the wine of every year is made. I have endeavored before to hint at this vital moment in the manufacture of champagne; but let it now once more be understood that the wine is not the growth of one district, but the product of many, and that the difficulty of the whole business is at the side of the cuve. A little more of the vineyard of Ay, a little less Verzenay, a dash of Bouzy, a suspicion of Cramont, a thimbleful of Mailly, and so champagne is made. There are those among us who pride ourselves on the mingling of a bowl of punch, and many a friend of mine is terribly conceited on the subject of the high art of salad-mixing. But think of the delicacy of taste required in this manufacture, involving the reputation of a great house, and threatening some millions of stomachs. This is tasting with a vengeance when the practiced palate can say long before the fermentation is complete that the liquor in the mighty tun or vat or cuve is fit to be bottled, and is allowed to pass for this market or for that. The cuve satisfactorily filled, the elaboration of champagne has scarcely commenced. The bottling takes place in the Spring-time; that is to say, this year's vintage, which with my own eyes I have seen gathered and pressed, and which I have tasted in its cloying and saccharine state before going into the cask, will not be sufficiently fermented and fit for the cuve until the Spring of 1877. Once the wine has passed this test it is temporarily bottled, corked roughly, and strapped about with a stent iron ligature. The wine has fermented in the cask, and will continue to do so. Every single one out of these millions of bottles of champagne, in their preparatory state, must necessarily contain a thick muddy deposit, and the art from this point is to coagulate the sediment, to twist it and turn it until it forms into a ball, and eventually to get it up to the top of the bottle, so that it may be expelled with a bang when the temporary cork is taken out and the proper one is adjusted. This gradual coagulation and expulsion of the sediment is what may be called the conjuring trick of champagne-making. You will imagine, of course, that the bottles already placed in rack are allowed to settle, and then subjected to a process of gentle turning by machinery. Not a bit of it. Every single one that is made is twisted day after day by the human hand. No more delicate and gradual motion than this can be discovered. Think of the labor of this process. It is the duty of one person to go round the cellars, cave after cave, and bin after bin, and to give every bottle a gentle wriggle. The turn of yesterday having been accurately marked at the foot in chalk. I asked in amazement if the individual to whom this hideously monotonous task was intrusted was not mad or suffering from incipient softness of the brain. Dazed as I was with these multitudinous piles, I marveled how any one could be found to undertake the task without some relief; but my accomplished guide, M. Vasnier, the leading spirit and artistic motive power in this celebrated firm, satisfied my scruples by showing me the twister-in-chief, and assuring me that, far from being mad, he was particularly fond of his duty, which he had never left for years, and was moreover particularly sensitive and jealous of the slightest interference. In fact, he took a pride in the millions of his children, he grieved when rapid fermentation smashed one of them into fragments, and he could only be consoled for the departure of twisted and perfect bottles by the knowledge of the approach of many more cloudy, sedimented, untwisted, and imperfect tyros. In process of time, and with much gentle handling, the sediment gradually ascends to the top of the bottle, and settles at the base of the cork. Once firmly established there, it is expelled, cork and all, with a pop and a bang, and the bottle of wine is left minus its sediment, clear as a bell, and, doubtless, as many will think, fit to be properly corked again and packed for exportation. But even yet the vital moment has not arrived. It is even too dry at this moment for English palates, and now comes the time when the sweetening liqueur, composed of many good things, is added to the manufactured wine. English champagne—or rather, not to be misunderstood, champagne for the English market—requires very little of this foreign ingredient—a small percentage; Germany takes its champagne very sweet, indeed, and both Russia and France moderately so. All this requires care and judgment; but when as much liqueur has been added as is judged sufficient for each market, the bottles are properly corked and wired, all by hand, and are sent up stairs to be made pretty for the various markets. England likes for the decoration of its joyous wine gold foil, pink paper, rush cases, and wooden crates. Other countries are partial to waxed bottle-necks, disdain pink paper, and insist upon the conveyance of champagne in neat wicker baskets which would do wonderfully well for the system of garden flower and sweet herb incremation so ably defended by Mr. Seymour Haden.

We have now taken a rapid run round one of the largest manufactories of champagne in Reims, and as the regal stone stair-case is ascended, leading from the caves to civilization, when the wax tapers are extinguished and daylight is gradually gained, the visitor is informed that in looking over the caves of Mme. Pommery he has traversed no less than twenty-one acres of cellarage, and is once more told that every bottle of wine placed on the table passes through at least three hundred hands in its manufacture. The caves of Mme. Pommery at Reims are always, through the kindness of that lady, open to the inspection of the public, and various good stories are told by M. Victor, the kindly chef of the cellarage, who has been at the same post for over thirty years, and has a list of anecdotes almost as long as that of the names in his visitors' book. It may be well at this point to remark generally upon the likelihood and promise of this year's vintage in Champagne. I have seen a bountiful supply of grapes in the vineyards of Ay, considerable disease and pourriture at Verzenay, and have heard excellent accounts from Epernay and elsewhere. As remarked at the outset, the quantity is good; the quality is doubtful. If you will follow my brief description of the manufacture of champagne, you will see that the result of the wine harvest of 1876 cannot be accurately determined until the various cuvées are composed from the selected juices. But there is one strong fact which will be likely to influence public opinion in judging the commercial result of the vintage. It is this: The manufacturers of first-class champagne for the English market are not buying in any large quantities. In that splendid year of 1874, they were at the vineyards begging for more grapes. It is not so this year. On the contrary, the growers are begging for the custom of the manufacturers. The wine that we like in England cannot be made out of indifferent fruit; and the year 1876 will not be celebrated for its dry champagne."

A FAREWELL TO STAGE-COACHES.

The Georgetown (Col.) Miner of the 4th inst. says: "It will be a matter of regret to many to learn that our Concord coaches, which have been gradually pressed back westward from the Missouri River against the Continental Divide, will soon be exchanged for light spring-wagons of the omnibus pattern. So it is, and the glory of staging along the valley of Clear Creek will, in a few weeks, be exchanged for this safer and more comfortable, though tamer mode of conveyance. Charles Ruter, Superintendent of the Colorado Stage Company, left last week for the East, for the purpose of newly stocking the line throughout. Instead of the old-fashioned coaches, he will have made a full complement of broad track, platform-spring passenger wagons, capable of carrying twenty persons each. The seats will face the front; the sides will be arranged to give a good view of the country, or to be closed in rough weather, and no baggage will be carried. Thus many of the inconveniences of coaching will be obviated, passengers will be more comfortable, and the time of the journey will be reduced one-third. In sixty days this change will be carried into effect, and the new era inaugurated."

GERMANY AND COUNT ARNIM.

A HEAVY SENTENCE—FIVE YEARS' PENAL SERVITUDE FOR INSULTING THE FOREIGN OFFICE.

From the Saturday Review.

Germany, like other nations, has two sides—the prosaic and the poetic—and exhibits them sometimes in rapid succession. Things happen in Germany, often within a few days of each other, of which every honorable German must be justly ashamed, and of which every honorable German must be justly proud. It is impossible to believe that there is one lover of his country in a hundred, out of the strictly official circle, who does not deplore the monstrous sentence on Count Arnim. That Count Arnim is a very foolish person, and has behaved in a very improper way, may be readily admitted. The pamphlet Pro Nihilo was a very offensive document. It betrayed confidences of the Emperor which were made with the unguarded ease that is natural when one gentleman thinks he may trust another. If Count Arnim did not compose it he must have supplied the materials, and there is something very discreditable in the attitude he has assumed in regard to its publication. He never says that he did not write it or cause it to be written; he merely challenges his adversaries to prove that he had anything to do with it. This is not the course a high-minded man would take in such a case. If he had had nothing to do with it, Count Arnim should have distinctly repudiated it as totally unworthy of him, and should have given every possible assistance in the discovery of the real author. What would be thought in England if a pamphlet appeared in which the confidential utterances of the Queen to Mr. Gladstone were revealed; and, on Mr. Gladstone being taxed with the authorship, he merely replied, "Prove that I sent it to the printer?" Count Arnim by his conduct had irretrievably lost his position and his reputation, and he might have been safely left to linger on in merited disgrace. But to sentence him to five years' penal servitude for doing what he has done is a frightful outrage on justice. The court which awarded the sentence set forth, with a kind of comic gravity, the reasons for its decision—that Count Arnim had betrayed his country, abused the confidence of the Emperor, and insulted Prince Bismarck and the Foreign Office. That he had betrayed his country in any intelligible sense is totally untrue. What he had done was that, when French Ambassador, he failed to recognize that he was completely the subordinate of Prince Bismark, and was haunted by the old Prussian notion that he was answerable to no one but his sovereign. He did abuse the confidence of the Emperor, for he repeated remarks of the Emperor which were meant to be confidential, and for this he deserved to be dismissed from the Emperor's service. The offence of insulting the Foreign Office is so strange and new a one, so incomprehensible to English readers, that it is difficult to judge whether Count Arnim committed it or not. We can only guess that, if such an offense could be imagined, Count Arnim would be sure to have been guilty of it. But to give a man five years' penal servitude for insulting the Foreign Office is like a landlord burning a peasant's cottage because the peasant has not taken off his hat when they met. Lord Derby would walk through a wilderness if all the Londoners who have insulted the Foreign Office in the last few months were sent to prison. Prince Bismarck has, of course, had a triumph. He has shown how very powerful he is, just as the pagan gods were supposed to show how very powerful they were when they sent an earthquake or a thunderbolt, because a pig of the wrong age had been sacrificed. But the sacrificers of pigs cannot have much admired or loved such gods, and many Germans will secretly pass judgments on Prince Bismarck's triumph into which very little love or admiration will enter. No doubt the official world will be, if possible, more abjectly afraid of him than ever; but many an honest noble will think that to persecute with vulgar tyranny the head of one of the first families of Prussia is a sad departure from good old traditions, and many an honest Liberal will sigh over the thought that at this time of the world's day such things can be done in the name of German justice.

THE CLERGYMAN'S WIFE.

From the Saturday Review.

Our Sisterhoods' work is unexampled and unequaled, but there are certain things which your clergymen's wives can do which our Sisters cannot. There can be no doubt that, on the whole, the wives of the clergy are most useful. They certainly do a great deal of work. They teach in the schools, they act as district visitors, they superintend female parish work, they help to find situations for the girls in their town or village, and they attend to the decoration of the church. All this they do gratuitously, nor do they expect any thanks for it. They willingly agree to a far larger proportion of their husbands' incomes being devoted to charitable purposes than would the wives of most laymen, and they are most careful in saving such remnants from their table as can possibly be spared, in order to feed the weak and sickly around them. The very small establishment of the Rector is thus sometimes more productive of "crumbs" for the poor than the kitchen of a neighboring Crœsus. The clergyman's wife is very useful in another way. However charitable the Squire's wife may be, she is often away from home, and during her absence her servants cannot carry on, in the same manner that she would, her works of charity. But the Rector's wife rarely takes a holiday, and therefore the poor can almost always fall back on her; and, if need be, she can write to the Squire's wife when she is absent, and lay before her any cases where money, or that which will require money, may be necessary. Hundreds and thousands of kind acts have been performed by our clergymen's wives. These excellent women have denied themselves numberless luxuries and pleasures, and have screwed and pinched their slender purses in order to help their poorer neighbors. How many Summer tours and pleasant visits have they not given up to assist some member of that lower middle class whom it is so difficult to reach, and for helping whom so little credit is to be obtained. Sometimes the parson's bride brings a nice little dowry, and then a large slice of her income is cheerfully given up to help her husband's parishoners. On the whole, few people who are not religious (in the ecclesiastical sense of the word) make so many self-sacrifices as do clergymen's wives. Some of them are, of course, selfish and worldly-minded; but we believe that these form rare exceptions to the general rule. Usually all is well, so long as the wives of our clergy do not interfere with the care of souls. But no women would be so careful to avoid meddling in matters of religion as they. In other words, the clergyman's wife must not become the priestess.

HOW A CORRESPONDENT LOST HIS BOOTS.

The correspondent of the London News writes: "In the Head-quarters of the Army of the Morava at Deligrad, after the mid-day meal has been eaten in the large room of the ex-school-house, which I have in former letters dignified with the appellation of the Head-quarter Château, it is the custom, when there is no fighting anywhere about, for men to indulge in relaxation. Some chat over their cigarettes in the open air and consume countless tumblerful of tea a la Russe; others pursue the avocation of letter-writing under difficulties, owing to the absence of such accommodation as a table or a seat; and very many addict themselves to slumber in the semi-subterranean structures. It is an eligible period for refreshing sleep, since it is possible then to take off one's boots without being kept awake by cold, as is the case when one rashly strips on going to bed for the night. In our cave most were asleep about 4 o'clock on the afternoon of the 17th, when we were rudely awakened by a sudden shout for Prince Ghika and Mr. Salusbury. The former is an officer on the General Staff, the latter is a young Englishman, who is acting as the aide de camp of Gen. Dochtouroff, having quitted for that function the position he previously held of Lieutenant in the squadron of cavalry raised by Col. McIver. We all turned out, and it was found that the alarm had been given by Gen. Dochtouroff, who was just starting, the arrangement having half an hour before been made between him and Gen. Tchernayeff, for Eastern Servia, to assume the direction of the operations impending there. In five minutes Ghika and Salusbury, who were both to accompany the General, were ready for the wagon which was already waiting. A more betattered aide than young Salusbury I never saw. From continued bivouacking his uniform has assumed a curiously negative tint, and his tunic is long past patching. In the matter of boots he was simply a scandal, both to the Army of the Morava and to his own nationality; and for the credit of our common country I had to lend him mine, without anticipating that he was suddenly to depart with them on an expedition of uncertain length. It was therefore with unmitigated horror that I watched him obey his chief's summons, arrayed in the trusty safeguards I had provided for myself against the greatest nuisance of campaigning—wet feet and legs in rainy weather. But there was no alternative. A barefooted aide de camp I have never heard of except in the armies of Abyssinia and Ashantee, and so with a deep sigh I watched the departure of the General, his aide, and my boots."

KILLED AT A TOURNAMENT.

The Galveston (Texas) News says: "On Saturday last Peed's Mill, in the southern portion of Kaufman County, was the scene of an accident by which Hiram Millsack, a young man about twenty-one years of age, came to a terrible death. A tournament ground, with track and poles, had been laid off at that place, and last Saturday was the appointed time for the gallant knights to test their skill. Prof. Townley, a writing master of the neighborhood, was one of the most proficient gentlemen present in taking the rings. He rode a fierce, powerful, and unmanageable horse, and upon starting to run through advised the others not to follow him until he had succeeded in stopping the fiery animal. Millsack, however, disregarded the advice, and started after him at full speed on a pony. Prof. Townley succeeded in taking all the rings but one, and, in turning his horse at full speed, ran against Millsack, who turned on a sharp angle. The powerful and fiery horse of Townley struck Millsack with his head, knocking him from his pony. The larger horse struck the pony and threw it with terrible force upon the fallen young man. Millsack was crushed to death."

LAW REPORTS.

COURT NOTES.

Judgment was obtained yesterday by the Government in three suits against Charles R. Tyng & Co. in the United States District Court for amounts due on warehouse bonds.

In Part II. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday, Caroline Gross, living at No. 127 Goerck street, who stole a set of furs, the property of Emma Hellricks, an inmate of the same house, pleaded guilty. She was sentenced by Judge Sutherland to one year in the Penitentiary.

The suit of Martin Jackson against Fernando Wood was brought to trial before Judge Sedgwick and a jury in the Superior Court yesterday. The plaintiff sued as the Assignee of N. Hill Fowler, to recover $800 alleged to have been paid by the latter in 1864, on the order of Wood, to one Charles McCarthy. The jury gave a verdict for the defendant.

On the 23d October Bartholomew Gordon, a notorious young thief, living at No. 492 Tenth avenue, snatched a pocket-book from Mrs. Ellen Howard, of No. 538 Tenth avenue, and was arrested. In Part II. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday Gordon pleaded guilty, and was sentenced by Judge Sutherland to two years and six months in State Prison.

On the 23d of October John McNally and Eugene Hess, of No. 492 Tenth avenue, quarreled, and in the course of the dispute McNally stabbed Hess in the side with a penknife. In Part II. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday, Assistant District Attorney Rollins accepted a plea of assault and battery from McNally, and Judge Sutherland sent him to the Penitentiary for one year.

The persons convicted at this term of the United States Circuit Court, criminal branch, will be brought before Judge Benedict this morning for sentence. It is understood that at this time a motion in arrest of judgement will be made in the case of Capt. J. L. Grindle, of the ship St. Mark, convicted of inhuman treatment on the high seas, and sentence will be postponed to admit of argument.

As Albert Gastman, of No. 305 Avenue A, was standing at his door on the evening of Oct. 25, he was approached by Francis McArdle, of No. 344 East Thirty-first street, who snatched his watch and chain and ran off, but was subsequently captured. In Part II. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday, the thief pleaded guilty, and was sentenced by Judge Sutherland to two years in State Prison.

The suit of the United States against James Watson Webb, late Minister to Brazil, to recover about £9,000, alleged to be due in the settlement of claims against the Brazilian Government, will be called for a second trial in the United States District Court next Monday. The case was tried in June last, before Judge Blatchford, resulting in a disagreement of the jury, they being equally divided as to a verdict.

A second trial of the case of the United States against the Fourth National Bank of this City was had yesterday in the United States Circuit Court, before Judge Shipman. The suit was brought to recover the amount paid on a bounty check alleged to have been fraudulently indorsed, and at this trial judgment was returned for the Government for $154 70. Assistant United States Attorney Sly appeared for the prosecution.

A decision was rendered yesterday, in the United States Circuit Court, by Judge Wallace, on a motion for a new trial in the case of Samuel S. Archer against the Ocean National Bank. The suit was brought to recover the value of certain bonds belonging to the plaintiff, and stolen at the time of the bank robbery, some years ago. At its trial the jury decided against the plaintiff, and Judge Wallace now denies the motion for a new trial.

THE TRIAL OF WILLIAM A. FOWLER.

The investigation of the charges made by Mayor Schroeder against Water Commissioner Fowler was continued yesterday afternoon by the Brooklyn Board of Aldermen. Only eleven members answered to their names when the roll was called, which is two less than a quorum; but by mutual consent of counsel for both sides, the trial went on without a quorum. Daniel Northrop, the Secretary of the Board of City Works, was recalled and examined by Corporation Counsel De Witt. Witness testified that he did not know when the bids for the construction of the Hempstead Reservoir were received by the Board of City Works; they were formally opened Jan. 4, 1872, as appeared by the indorsement made by witness at that time. Mr. Northrup was cross-examined briefly by Mr. Pryor, in reply to whose questions he said that he had never seen any act of Mr. Fowler which appeared to him to evince a disposition on his [Fowler's] part to sacrifice the interests of the City, or to show any partiality toward Kingsley & Kenney. John Cameron, a contractor, residing in Plainsfield, N. J., was the next witness. He testified that he was familiar with earth excavating, and knew the character of the soil in the Hempstead Reservoir. He was also familiar with the price of labor, &c., in 1872, and, in his opinion, twenty-five or twenty-six cents per yard would have been a fair price for that work at that time. The remainder of the day's session was taken up by the presentation, by the Corporation Counsel, of a large amount of documentary evidence, consisting mainly of the minutes of the Board of City Works, before and since its reorganization, and including a number of communications from Chief Engineer Adams in reference to the Hempstead Reservoir.

MANDAMUS DENIED.

Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday denied applications in two cases for a mandamus against Allan Campbell, the Commissioner of Public Works. The first of the applications was made by John Salisbury, Jr., who attempted to have Commissioner Campbell compelled to sign a contract made in July, 1874, for the regulating, &c., of Ninety-third street, from Second avenue to the East River. In this case it appeared that Salisbury had not done the work, but that it had been done by private parties at about one-quarter of the contract prices. Judge Barrett, in a memorandum of his decision refusing to grant the writ mandamus, says: "The writ is discretionary and should not be granted to enable the relator to secure an advantage from his own wrong or laches. Here he waited for over two years and, without moving, permitted nearly all the work to be done by others free of expense to the City. Now, when the work is almost completed, and the prices of labor and materials are greatly reduced, he moves. This is not excused in the papers, and the excuse given argumentatively is entirely insufficient. It is, therefore, unnecessary to consider the other questions. Motion denied, with $10 costs."

The second application was on behalf of Isaac Lummey, who desired a mandamus to compel the Commissioner to sign a contract for the regulating, &c., of Ninety-ninth street, from First to Third avenue. This case was similar to the first, and in it Judge Barrett renders a similar decision.

AN EX-POLICE OFFICER CONVICTED.

On the 17th of October, 1875, Dr. Shephard, of No. 215 East Tenth street, was attacked with cholera, and drank some medicine containing a quantity of opium. Shortly afterward, while walking through the street, he was again attacked, and entered the liquor store at the corner of Tenth street and Avenue A, where he drank a glass of brandy. The pain was so intense that he could not leave the store, and while in a semi-unconscious condition he was approached by William H. Kenny, an ex-Police officer, who, after asking him what time it was, robbed him of his watch and chain, valued at $150. Kenny left the store, and although the Doctor made the most active efforts to capture him, he did not succeed until the 13th of last October—a year after the occurrence—when he had him arrested. Kenny was placed on trial before Recorder Hackett yesterday, in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions, and denied the theft. A searching cross-examination by Assistant District Attorney Bell elicited the fact that the prisoner, who was formerly a member of the Metropolitan Police force, and subsequently hung around the Bowery and Bayard street, had once been arrested for assault and battery, and on another occasion had been tried and convicted of burglary. The jury promptly found the ex-policeman guilty, and Recorder Hackett sentenced him to three years in State Prison.

KINGSLEY & KEENEY'S SUIT.

The suit of Kingsley & Keeney against the City of Brooklyn for the recovery of $178,000 for extra work, which they claim to have performed on the Hempstead Reservoir, was continued yesterday in the Brooklyn Common Council Chamber, before the Referees, Messrs. Lott, Rodman, and Fisher. Corporation Counsel De Witt and Mr. Parsons appeared for the city, and the plaintiffs were represented by Mr. Joshua M. Van Cott and Gen. B. F. Tracy. The entire day's session was taken up with the examination of Mr. Samuel B. Probasco, the Consulting Engineer of the Board of City Works, and his testimony consisted entirely of a technical account of the construction of the Hempstead Reservoir. The reference was adjourned until one week from next Monday at 10 o'clock A. M.

A DISHONEST HOTEL PORTER.

On the 22d of October the room of John Britton, a guest at the Westminster Hotel, was robbed of a cash-box containing $2,125 in money, a bank book, and a cambric handkerchief. The stolen property was subsequently found in the possession of John Carroll, an employe of the hotel, who admitted his guilt. When the case was called by Assistant District Attorney Rollins yesterday in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions, the prisoner pleaded guilty, and Judge Sutherland sentenced him to four years in State Prison at hard labor.

POPPENHUSEN'S RAILROAD.

A number of the stockholders of the Long Island Railroad Company recently applied to the Supreme Court, Kings County, for an injunction to restrain that company from carrying out the terms of its lease of the Southern Railroad of Long Island, and the North Shore and Flushing Railroad for a term of ninety-nine years, on the ground that the terms of the lease were extravagant in their character, a fraud on the stockholders of the Long Island Company, and were made principally to enhance the personal and pecuniary interests of Conrad Poppenhuson and others. The case was argued before Judge Gilbert, who yesterday morning rendered his decision, denying the motion to continue the injunction, with $10 costs.

WHAT RUSSIAN CONQUEST MEANS.

From the Saturday Review.

It is evident that, if Russia is determined to make war upon Turkey, the rupture can only be prevented by the menace or the use of force. The quarrel was utterly unprovoked on the part of Turkey; for even the Bulgarian outrages which now furnish a pretext for interference were caused by Russian intrigues to promote insurrection in the province. It might have been supposed that the thin disguise which covers a policy of aggrandizement would have served the purpose of conventional decency rather than of concealment; but it seems that Russian professions of sympathy for the oppressed subjects of Turkey are seriously accepted. In an article on the Turkish Empire in the current number of the Quarterly Review, the writer, who is friendly to Russia and hostile to Turkey, gravely speaks of the immense sacrifices which Russia has for generations past made for the sake of the kindred Christian races which are still under the Turkish yoke. It might be difficult to show that Russia has ever expended a life or a rouble for the benefit of Bosnia or Bulgaria. The kindred Christian races whose grievances have often furnished excuses for territorial aggression have only been known as kindred to the Russians within the last dozen years. At the time of the Crimean war neither Russians nor South Sclavonians had learned that they were associated with one another by irresistible sympathies of blood and language. The early inventors of ethnology little suspected the crimes which would in future times be committed in the name of their fascinating science. The different branches of the Sclavonic race had been content for centuries to dwell apart, and those of them who were subject to the Turks were described in the language of diplomacy as Greeks, because they for the most part belonged to the Greek or Eastern communion. The Russians from time to time made war on the Turks in the alleged interest of their coreligionists, and not of their kinsmen. The orthodox monks of Jerusalem and their congregations who, perhaps much to their own surprise, caused the Emperor Nicholas to avenge their wrongs by crossing the Pruth, were probably not of Sclavonic blood. English promoters of Russian policy will perhaps be shocked to learn that the students at Pesth have lately proclaimed their sympathy with the Turks on account of their Turanian origin. Political feeling readily assumes the form of pedantic nonsense. It may be doubted whether the Christian inhabitants of the Turkish provinces really wish to substitute the Russian for the Turkish rule; but it is possible that they may, like the world in general, prefer unknown evils to actual sufferings. At present they are ill-governed, neglected in ordinary times, and occasionally exposed to gross oppression; but the weak and lax administration of Turkey has not prevented the growth of population and prosperity in Bulgaria. A Russian conquest means a rigorous despotism, exclusion from trade with the rest of the world, and for those who depart from the orthodox creed the negation of religious liberty. Large districts in Poland have been forcibly converted from Latian Catholicism by military force, and the same measures would be unhesitatingly applied to Catholics or Protestants in new Russian provinces.

THE MONTREAL FEMALE JAIL.

The Montreal Witness of Wednesday says: Yesterday eighty Roman Catholic women were removed from the common jail to the new female prison. There were fifty of the number Canadians and the remainder English-speaking. One of the latter managed to be removed by stating that she was a Roman Catholic, while in reality she was a Protestant. Mr. L. J. Lauzen, Roman Catholic Chaplain of the new prison, informed our reporter to-day that no decision had as yet been arrived at by the Local Government as to whether Protestant female prisoners in the common jail should be placed in the new prison or not. There is, however, a Protestant chapel in the building. There are at present two dormitories, the English-speaking women and the Canadians being separated, but this number may be increased to four. The inmates work in four divisions, each one being classed according to the nature of the offense for which she may have been committed. There is accommodation in the building for between 140 and 150 prisoners. The prisoners are watched over by twenty-one nuns of the Bon Pasteur. There are also about twenty fallen women, who, before the nuns took charge of the new jail, had placed themselves under their care. The Government, Mr. Lauzen, says, pays nothing toward the support of these.

FORTY-TWO YEARS' BALLOTS.

The Ithaca Journal says: "A very valuable and interesting collection of documents is in possession of Mr. Henry A. Morgan, of Aurora. It is a complete set of the various election tickets, of all parties, that have had candidates for town, county, State, or national offices in that place since 1834. Opposite each name, on each ticket, is the number of votes cast for that person. The official canvass of the County Committee for each year is also given. The collection was begun by Christopher Morgan, uncle of the gentleman who holds it at present. Col. E. B. Morgan, Hon. W. H. Bogart, and Mr. Arms have added to it successively, Mr. H. A. Morgan assisting Mr. Arms for many years, and for the last year or two keeping it himself. One good-sized book has been filled and another will shortly be begun."

FRIDAY, Nov. 10—P. M.

The stock market was weak and feverish, and a still further heavy decline in prices was established. The feeling of uneasiness created by the contradictory reports circulated as to the result of the Presidential election had a tendency to unsettle values and intensify the depression which has recently formed the most prominent characteristic of speculation. Some special causes have also contributed to this state of affairs, such as the decreased earnings of railroads and the reported troubles of some of the coal companies. The entire business aggregated 165,850 shares, which included 61,850 of Lake Shore, 21,100 of Michigan Central, 17,000 of St. Paul, 16,300 of Western Union, 14,000 of Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, 10,200 of New-Jersey Central, and 6,500 of Ohio and Mississippi. The coal shares recorded the greatest decline, New-Jersey Central fell from 35 to 32⅛, and Delaware, Lackawanna and Western from 73⅜ to 71⅝, with only a fractional recovery at the close in both instances. Delaware and Hudson Canal declined from 71 to 70. Lake Shore fluctuated between 55¼ and 54⅛, closing at 54½. Michigan Central dropped off from 43¼ to 41½, and closed at 42¼. The Granger shares were weak and lower, North-western common falling from 36⅞ to 35¾, and the preferred from 59 to 58, with closing sales respectively at 36⅛ and 58½. Ohio and Mississippi declined from 8 to 7, and Wabash, which recently developed such unaccountable strength, was weak again to-day, falling off from 7¾ to 6¾. Among investment shares, Rock Island declined from 101¼ to 100½, and New-York Central from 101¾ to 101½. Hannibal and St. Joseph declined ¾ ₩ cent. for the common and 1¼ ₩ cent. for the preferred, compared with the closing quotation of last evening. In express shares, Adams declined to 107½ on small transactions.

Money loaned early in the day at 4 per cent. to call borrowers, and was afterward advanced to 5 ₩ cent.; then the rate was reduced on larger offerings to 2½ ₩ cent., and at the close loans were made at 2½@3 ₩ cent. Prime mercantile paper was discounted at 5@6 ₩ cent. The national bank notes received for redemption at Washington to-day amounted to $600,000. The rates of domestic exchange on New-York at the under-mentioned cities to-day were—Savannah buying ⅜ off, selling par at ¼ off; Charleston, scarce, 5-16 to par; Chicago, par; Cincinnati, 100 discount; St. Louis, 125 discount, and New-Orleans Commercial ⅜, Bank, ¼.

The foreign advices report a decline in Consols at London of ⅛@⅜ ₩ cent., the closing quotation being 96@96⅛ for both money and the account. United States bonds were also weaker and closed at 103⅜ for 1865s, (old,) 109 for 1867s, 108⅜@108½ for 10-40s, and 106½ for new 5s—the latter showing a falling off of ⅜@½ ₩ cent. from last evening's quotation. Erie closed at 9⅞@10. The Bank of England lost £210,000 bullion on balance to-day. Bar silver is quoted at 54⅛d.@54¼d. ₩ ounce. Rentes at Paris closed firm at 105.25. The specie in the Imperial Bank of Germany increased 3,350,000 marks during the week. United States new 5s at Frankfort were quoted at 102½.

The Sterling Exchange market was steady at yesterday's quotations, namely: actual business rates, $4 81½@$4 81¾ for bankers' 60-day bills and $4 83½@$4 83¾ for demand, and nominal asking rates $4 82 and $4 84.

Speculation in the Gold-room was more active to-day. The price opened at 109⅝ and fluctuated frequently between that figure and 109⅞, closing at the intermediate quotation. On gold loans 1 to 3 ₩ cent. was paid for carrying. Loans were also made flat.

Government bonds were steady. Railroad bonds declined 3 ₩ cent. for New-Jersey Central convertibles, ½ ₩ cent. for Ohio and Mississippi seconds, and 1 ₩ per cent. for Union Pacific Sinking Funds, with a recovery on the latter at the close. The balance of the list were generally firm on slight changes. State bonds declined ¾ ₩ cent. for old Tennessees, to 45¼. District of Columbia 3.65s were also lower, selling down to 69.

The $2,381,000 registered consolidated stock of the City of New-York, awarded last June, has been placed upon the regular list of the Stock Exchange, to be called "New-York City 6s, 20-50s of 1876." The Louisville and Nashville Railroad second mortgage gold bonds have been placed upon the free list.

FROM THE WRONG TRAIN TO JAIL.

The Trenton (N. J.) Gazette of Friday says: "A young man named Fitzpatrick, from New-York City, was arrested on a Centennial train from Philadelphia to New-York, when it arrived at the Clinton street depot last evening, and brought to the City Hall and locked up. He had two ladies with him, and he had excursion tickets for all three, from New-York to Philadelphia and return. It seems that in returning he got on the wrong train, he alleges, by the direction of the train-agent, and when the conductor came around he told Fitzpatrick that he was on the wrong train, and demanded $6 more. Fitzpatrick refused to pay this, and the conductor said he would put him off when the train arrived here. Fitzpatrick replied that he could not do it, and the conductor said if he could not he would have help enough to accomplish it. On arriving at the Clinton street station he was given in charge of an officer and brought to the City Hall and locked up. The two ladies accompanied him, and sat weeping by his cell door."

NOTICE.

We cannot notice anonymous communications. In all cases we require the writer's name and address, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We cannot, under any circumstances, return rejected communications, nor can we undertake to preserve manuscripts.

We stated yesterday morning that there was no room for further doubt in regard to the result of the Presidential election. We have simply to repeat that assertion to-day. The returns which will be received in New-Orleans to-day from the river counties of Louisiana may have the effect of making still more preposterous the Democratic claim that the State remains in doubt. They are hardly needed to increase the certainty that the State is Republican by a large majority. South Carolina is just as certainly ours as it was yesterday, and as it will be when the official canvass has been fairly concluded. Fresh details from Florida merely show that THE TIMES dispatches were correct in claiming a certain Republican majority of 1,500, and a probable one of 2,000. It has taken some of our contemporaries two days to reach the conclusions given in THE TIMES of Wednesday morning. Let us hope that two days more will be sufficient to bring about a general agreement on our statements of Thursday and yesterday. The pernicious and totally uncalled-for excitement of the last forty-eight hours is too costly, in a business sense, and too dangerous to the maintenance of public peace, to be fomented by any newspaper with a character to lose.

The action of those who persist in keeping alive the public excitement over the result of the election by sensational dispatches and news without foundation is something more than mischievous. It is positively wicked. People who prefer to doubt the correctness of election returns which are susceptible of but one interpretation must be content to wait, with as much patience and good humor as they can command, the result of the official count. It is bad enough to have a pack of fools and knaves who have wagered money on the election howling insane threats about what will happen if they are compelled to pay their bets. It is infinitely worse to find the telegraph system of the country used, apparently with the consent of its acting managers, to disseminate reports either deliberately false or obviously prejudiced about matters which involve issues of the utmost delicacy, if not of the greatest peril. If the gross abuse of their functions which has been tolerated and apparently encouraged among the Southern agents of the Western Union Telegraph Company be due to the illness of Mr. ORTON, the honest and sober majority of this people will be disposed to pray very earnestly for his recovery. The Western Union Telegraph Company has just as little right to allow its agents to go into the business of concocting and making public sensational or bogus news as the Central Railroad would have to pervert its franchise to similar uses.

We are constantly in the receipt of telegrams from distant towns and cities informing us that dispatches have been sent from this City to Democrats saying that "THE TIMES concedes Florida to TILDEN," or "THE TIMES concedes Louisiana to TILDEN," and asking if it be true. In reply we will state, once for all, that when THE TIMES concedes anything more to TILDEN than it has done, the report will be made either from this office or through its own columns. Had we based our returns on conjecture, instead of taking measures to get accurate information, we should have conceded TILDEN's election on Wednesday morning, as all our City contemporaries did. There was no guess work about our conclusions then, and our readers may rest assured that there will be none in any that we may hereafter declare. To show the difference between newspaper reports based on guess work and on trustworthy information, it is only necessary to call attention to the fact that every morning paper in this City except THE TIMES gave the Democrats a majority in the next Assembly of this State ranging from 5 to 15. THE TIMES gave 73 Republicans to 55 Democrats, and the official returns thus far show only one variation from these figures. What reliance can be placed on reports from Florida and Louisiana published in newspapers which could not give more accurate returns than these of the election in their own State?

Without claiming any more credit than is justly due to honest and painstaking journalism, we may further call attention to the correctness of our tables of the members of the next Congress. The Tribune of Thursday set down the complexion of the House as Democratic by a majority of 22, while the Herald of yesterday outdid this blunder by putting the majority at 25. THE TIMES of Thursday published a table showing a probable tie in the House, and our list of yesterday gave the distribution of members which to-day's dispatches leave unchanged —143 Republicans and 147 Democrats, with three members still to be elected. The only qualification called for by the latest news is that in the Sixth District of Missouri the election is claimed for the Republican candidate by a majority of one, while our list gives it to the Democrats.

LET THE COUNT BE HONEST.

President GRANT's mistakes have usually resulted from influences which at the time surrounded him. Left to himself, his common sense, and his instinctive appreciation of the right, have more than once, during his civil administration, served the country well. Both obtain expression in the dispatches which he yesterday addressed to Gen. SHERMAN in relation to the complications apparently existing, or to be apprehended in Louisiana and Florida. "No man worthy of the office of President," telegraphs Gen. GRANT, "should be willing to hold it if counted in or placed there by fraud. Either party," he adds, "can afford to be disappointed in the result. The country cannot afford to have the result tainted by the suspicion of illegal or false returns." Truer or wiser words have not been authoritatively spoken since the closeness of the Presidential contest was made manifest. They cover the exigencies of the case completely, and they will have an echo in the breast of every American citizen whose judgment is not warped by the passion of partisanship. Republicans, especially, will applaud the President's declaration as responsive to their earnest wishes. If, as HENRY CLAY said, it was better to be right than to be President, it is infinitely better for the Republican Party to be defeated in the election just over, than to achieve victory "tainted by the suspicion" of fraud. It would be false to its duty, however, if, while protesting against fraud in its own behalf, it allowed fraud on the part of its opponents to be counted out, without employing the methods provided by the law for its prevention. This is what President GRANT's order amounts to. It deprecates and denounces fraud, and it brings into play the powers intrusted to him for the purpose of giving effect to the honest preference of the States concerned.

There will be a great outcry, of course. The two orders, issued almost simultaneously, will be assailed as intended to use troops to sway the action of the boards of canvassers in Louisiana and Florida. The proceeding will be attacked as an interference with the freedom of election. Only blind partisans can be misled by these pretenses. The objects indicated by the President as those to which Gens. AUGUR and RUGER should confine themselves, are beyond cavil. What are these officers to be instructed to do? "To be vigilant with the force at their command to preserve peace and good order, and to see that the proper and legal boards of canvassers are unmolested in the performance of their duties." Could anything be less objectionable as terms indicative of the duty to be discharged? Not the slightest effort to influence the result is contemplated. All the commanding officers are to be required to effect is the enforcement of peace and good order and the support of the proper officials in the performance of their duties. They are required, in fact, to sustain lawful authority, if that authority find itself unable otherwise to perform its functions. The orders are issued in pursuance of the policy which dictated the Attorney General's circular of instructions to United States Marshals. The purpose then avowed was to place troops in every district where violence was apprehended, or where intimidation was practiced or threatened in any form, in connection with the election, in order that they might be within the jurisdiction of United States Marshals, and subject to their call for the protection of the public peace and the enforcement of the law applicable to the election. The counting of votes is as much a part of the election as the depositing of ballots; and the need of the presence of the military is at this moment as urgent in Louisiana and Florida as it was in South Carolina during the canvass and while the voting was in progress.

The circumstances are exceptional. The result of the election turns upon the votes of South Carolina, Louisiana, and Florida, whose refusal to be parties to the making of a solid South has upset the Democratic calculation. The presence of troops in South Carolina frustrated the shot-gun policy. A Republican majority was secured on Tuesday in spite of all the intimidation, all the chicanery, that had been employed on the other side. It is not pretended that a single lawful Democratic voter was interfered with by the troops. The fact that they were available if occasion arose, secured good order at the polls, and assured the colored Republicans in the exercise of the franchise, without restraining the white Democrats. More than this the Federal Government could not have done without transcending its power; less it could not have done without neglecting its duty. Precisely the same exercise of authority is now called for in Louisiana and Florida. There can be no injustice to the voters, for the voting is over. Events, however, have given the two States a pivotal character. The acquisition of either would make TILDEN the next President. The gain of both would crown the Republican cause with success. Hence the concentration of national interest upon them, and the development of contingencies which warrant, to the fullest extent, the action of the Executive.

So far as a judgment can be intelligently formed, no room exists for doubt as to the verdict rendered by the majority of voters in Louisiana and Florida. They are in the same category with South Carolina,—States which only want fair play at an election to insure their alliance with the Republican Party. It is known that in the present election they have yielded Republican majorities. On that point our knowledge is sufficiently complete to justify the confidence we express. Between the depositing of the ballots, however, and the final and formal count, opportunities exist for violence and fraud; and either is again possible in reference to the count. Certain classes of Democrats are desperate. The game they have played so defiantly is lost unless by some means these States can be secured. The result already has been seen in the destruction of ballots and the falsification of records in Florida, and in Louisiana in attempts to swell fraudulently the votes in Democratic parishes, and to get rid of the records in parishes unquestionably Republican. These tactics are not yet ended. Threats and preparations for violence are reported from both States. The independent action of the Returning Boards is menaced. The position of Florida, as our dispatches show, is critical, and only the presence of Federal troops can restrain an excitement which jeopardizes the public peace, or prevent the consummation of plans which are designed to subvert the lawful will of the States and make them tributary to a Democratic triumph.

The good faith of the Republican managers both in Louisiana and Florida could not be better attested than by the proposition alluded to by President GRANT in his second order. "The presence of citizens from other States," he says, "is requested in Louisiana to see that the board of canvassers make a fair count of the vote actually cast." The suggestion came from Gov. STEARNS, of Florida, as well as from Gov. KELLOGG, of Louisiana, and nothing could better show the integrity of their course. Whether it be acted upon or whether it come to naught, the suggestion indicates a desire which is shared by respectable Republicans all over the country. Their temper contrasts admirably with that displayed by some of our Democratic contemporaries, whose mischievous hints point to serious trouble if the scheme for capturing Louisiana or Florida break down. They would make the law a minor matter, if it stand in the way of their success. Their wild talk as to what may happen if, after all, HAYES be declared elected, shows how unfit they are to be trusted with the power they are eager to grasp. The Republicans, we are proud to say, have none of this spirit. They have from the first been prepared to accept the electoral verdict, whatever it might be, and they only ask now that the lawful authority of the Government shall be exercised to prevent frauds, or the suspicion of fraud, in counting the votes of the people.

THE EXPOSITION CLOSED.

It cannot be expected that the ceremonies with which the Centennial Exposition closed yesterday should be regarded with the enthusiasm which marked the opening. The whole subject has become too familiar to evoke the acclamation which attended the inauguration. We are still in the midst of a prolonged political excitement, and, theoretically at least, we cannot speed the parting guest with the same cheerfulness which met him when he came. There is an element of regret in the final closing of any work which has been prosperous, even though it may have been full of labor and difficulty. Nevertheless, as we review the brief history of the Exposition, we are moved to admiration and praise. It has been highly successful, after passing through a variety of discouragements. It has been useful in spite of many drawbacks and many gloomy forebodings. As the exhibitors go away, whether they go with a sense of regret, or of relief from vexation, they certainly may carry with them the reflection that they have severally contributed to the achievements of one of the greatest of world shows. It is unnecessary to say that these achievements, of which we can now take but little account, are of enduring value.

The Exposition has had a good effect in keeping alive the patriotism of the people. It may be fairly said that we need no incentive to vain-gloriousness, but, in a good sense, we have been made more proud of our country. Its resources—material, mental, and artistic—have furnished an exhibit which is not only creditable to us, but is surprising to many of the more intelligent of our foreign visitors. It is certain that an increased respect for the capabilities, history, and institutions of the Republic will be among the fruits of the Exhibition which has closed. It is a good thing, too, that our own people have thus been enabled to learn something of the products and methods of other nations. Possibly, our native self-confidence may have been startled, now and then, but, since we are not reckoned among the least conceited nations of the earth, it is not likely that we have found any check too severe for discipline. At any rate, if we have taught our visitors from abroad "that some things can be done as well as others," our own people have had before them striking examples of the difficulties with which we must contend in any international competition.

Nor is it true that the Exposition has been one of material prosperity and products only. It is a fact that the picture-galleries were the only places where crowds were ever dense. No cases in the Main Building attracted such knots of visitors and interested observers as those which contained the most artistic work in bronze, silver and gold, and fictile ware. The majolica, glass, porcelain, and wood-carvings were a constant feast to people of every rank of life. It is not possible that they went away without a gleam of enlightenment, nor that they clustered about these objects from motives of mere curiosity. And, knowing the mental alertness of the American people, we may be sure that each visitor went to his far-distant home in the West, or New-England, or Pennsylvania, with fresh ideas which will germinate and bear fruit among those to whom he became a reporter, a messenger. There, too, the commingling of people from various sections of the country was a good thing for everybody. Associations are formed and communications established which will be immensely valuable to the individual and to the nation. We may take credit to ourselves that the Exposition has brought out so many capital national traits. The patience, under discomfort and disappointment, which is certainly one of the American virtues, has been signally exemplified during "the great show." People have endured crowding in all sorts of conveyances, delays, buffetings, and various trials of patience, with exemplary cheerfulness. In the Exhibition grounds and at the daily besieged gates, there has been neither rowdyism nor ill-natured resistance to our slenderly equipped forms of authority. Vast numbers of people have been transported over long distances without many accidents, and, we may add, without provoking many complaints of hard usage.

The managers and projectors of this enterprise, now finished, deserve high praise. Every visitor has promptly expressed his surprise at the extent, beauty, and permanent character of the buildings, and in the magnitude of the work which had been accomplished with so little noise. The complex and widely ramifying machinery of the Exposition has usually been well managed and ingeniously contrived. The results are before the world. It is a matter for regret that the system of awards should have been so much out of keeping with the general conduct of the work. But it is too late now to recall errors. The Exposition is over at last. We have reasons for profound thankfulness that it was as good as it was. We have abundant cause for patriotic pride in all that was brought to light. It nobly rounded a century of national existence. It will long be remembered, let us hope, in our enjoyment of continued prosperity and peace.

THE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD ON THE EASTERN WAR.

Lord Beaconsfield has made a full and unusually frank statement of the purposes of the Government in regard to Turkey and the Eastern war. Nothing, however, which was unknown to the public has been revealed in his speech. The armistice has been agreed to, and a conference of the great powers will be held, where will be present not the ambassadors only, but "the statesmen" of each country—that is, in all probability, Prince GORTSCHAKOFF, Prince BISMARCK, Count ANDRASSY, the Marquis of Salisbury, and others.

The British Government, judging from this statement at the Lord Mayor's dinner, will insist on the integrity of the Turkish Empire, and oppose such occupation as will infringe on the supreme rights of the Porte. They will also seek in a mild and moderate manner to introduce the necessary "reforms" into the Turkish administration. But for a foundation, they stand on the Treaty of Paris, and are prepared to treat the Eastern question as they would have done seventeen years ago, and to act as though the Bulgarian massacres or the Bosnian outbreak had never occurred.

This is a policy which will by no means be satisfactory in England. Nor will the apparent threat of war, contained in the conclusion of DISRAELI's speech, be one which will meet with much response or support among the English people. It would be a war directly in opposition to popular English feeling—one waged to strengthen Mohammedan tyranny over Christian peasants. It is true that in England, as here, a Government can permit the nation to "drift" into war, before the people are ready for it. If DISRAELI is committed to support Turkey to any degree, he might occasion many dangerous complications before Parliament could be assembled and could stop him. But this is not characteristic of so skillful a diplomatist. He knows the power of words, but he does not propose to go beyond words. These bold hints of war are meant for the foreign market. Nothing is quoted in Russian journals or repeated in Turkish diplomatic circles but official utterances. When a Prime Minister, even on a social occasion, talks of war, the words pass through the Continent. They are there a threat. In England they are nothing but sound and rhetoric, and after-dinner oratory. But in the approaching conference they are expected to have their effect, both in intimidating the Russians and encouraging the Turks. They do not, however, express the popular sentiment of Great Britain, which we believe to be against war, on whatever pretexts, to hold up Turkey and Turkish oppression.

In the important conference soon to be held of the European powers, through their representatives, the uncertain element is as to the intentions of Russia. There are two views as to her policy. One maintains that, after having aimed for centuries at the great object of her ambition—the possession of Constantinople—she has at length attained such a favorable condition of affairs that she can strike boldly and without reserve for the prize. Her old enemy has made herself obnoxious to all Christendom; she is entangled in a dangerous and wide-spread rebellion; she has no cordial allies; the times seem ripe for the disruption of the Moslem Empire, and for vigorous blows both at her Asiatic and European possessions. Russia herself, too, is in unusual harmony with other powers. The Czar is bound by ties of blood to the Emperor WILLIAM, and, more important still, the policy of BISMARCK is to preserve the alliance of Russia. Austria is fettered by her Sclavonic subjects; Italy is in good understanding with the Muscovite Cabinet; France is indifferent; and England, who was the only opponent to be dreaded, is rendered cold to her old ally by Mohammedan cruelties. The hour seems favorable for the long-deferred and hoped-for enterprise against the City of the Bosphorus. This is the aspect of the question generally taken.

Another is, that Russia has been somewhat goaded into this struggle by popular excitement; that she will be content with much less than the final prize of Constantinople; that she is not ready, financially, for a great war, and is by no means certain what share in it the rest of Europe, and especially England, would take. It is claimed that the moral power of such a conference as is proposed would be felt even by her, and there can be no doubt that all Europe dreads war. The whole pressure of the Governments represented will be exerted to induce Russia to yield her most exorbitant claims, and Turkey to submit to reasonable changes. This would make peace possible, without a final campaign between Russia and the Porte, which might involve all Europe. This, we believe, will be the result.

STANLEY'S FLAGS.

It is the evident belief of certain English, philanthropists that Mr. STANLEY is marching through Central Africa with the American flag in one hand and the English flag in the other, perpetually killing native kings with his elephant rifle, and torturing such as he has merely wounded by reading to them old copies of the Herald. The philanthropists have therefore asked Lord Derby to say something withering concerning STANLEY, and that respectable nobleman has replied that he really hopes that STANLEY will give some satisfactory explanation of his Central African amusements, and that in the meantime the British consuls in Africa will be directed to request STANLEY to put his British flag in his pocket and to keep it there.

It may be fairly doubted whether the consuls will carry out Lord Derby's orders and whether STANLEY would be greatly grieved if they did. In the latter case, he would probably convert his British flag into a gross of scarlet neck-ties, and with their aid buy the devoted friendship of all the leading Central African monarchs. There is, however, little prospect that any British consul will succeed in acquainting him with Lord Derby's wishes. The Central African mails have latterly been exceedingly irregular, and it is scarcely to be supposed that any consul in the possession of his right mind and a comfortable salary would dream of setting out in personal search of the explorer. STANLEY will, therefore, continue to carry the British flag in his right hand—assuming that such has hitherto been his custom—until he returns to civilization, and is formally notified by the British Foreign Office that he must not play with it any more.

Skillful physiologists are of the opinion that both the English philanthropist and Lord Derby are mistaken in supposing that STANLEY constantly carries a British flag. They argue that no man with a flag in each hand could either shoot native kings or write letters to the Herald, and as it is conceded that STANLEY does carry the American flag, it follows that he does not carry the British flag. Moreover, as Lord Derby remarks, STANLEY is not a British subject, and hence has no reason for meddling with a flag that does not belong to him. But there is an Englishman in company with STANLEY who would naturally take his own flag with him. It is, therefore, in the highest degree probable that while these two brave men are marching across the continent, each one carries his own flag in his left hand, and thus gives to the procession a brilliant and awe-inspiring appearance. If at the same time STANLEY whistles the "Star-spangled Banner," and his companion whistles "God Save the Queen," Central Africa is enjoying one of the most gorgeous internationl pageants that the world has ever seen, and which could hardly be made more dazzling even by the addition of a small colored boy with a large and sonorous tin-pan.

As to STANLEY's alleged habit of shooting native kings, it is, to say the least, extremely rash for any philanthropist outside of Africa to assume that the explorer's conduct is either indiscreet or criminal. The native king is, of course, a man and a brother up to a certain point—though not too far—and hence ought not to be needlessly shot. But who can say that STANLEY has been guilty of any unnecessary shooting? His first battle on the shores of the Victoria Lake was clearly a defensive one. He had landed to buy food, and was immediately surrounded by a crowd of native kings who confidentially mentioned that they intended to kill him, and who brandished their heavy white-wash brushes and iron-bound pails in a way so plainly hostile that the wayfaring man, even though a member of the Herald's staff, could not fail to comprehend their deadly purpose. When STANLEY tried to execute a quiet retreat they attacked him with great fierceness, shouting their terrible war cry, "Golimahser!" and throwing all sorts of things at him. Naturally, he took up his rifle in his right hand and fired at them, a course which no unprejudiced man can honestly condemn. A few days later he returned to the place and attacked his enemies, in order to teach them that they could not try to massacre travelers with impunity. If he had not done so, the life of no future traveler in that region would be worth the smallest accident insurance policy. What he did on this occasion was precisely what a British steamer recently did on the Niger, when a tribe of native kings who had previously attacked a trading expedition were severely chastised, in order to encourage others to conduct themselves peaceably. The English philanthropists have not a word to say against the slaughter on the Niger, but assume that they are better judges than STANLEY what was the proper course for the latter to pursue.

But, argues the philanthropist, trade is one thing and exploration is another, and what it is proper for the Government to do in defense of trade, STANLEY has no right to do in defense of exploration. According to this theory, the native kings have a right to feel aggrieved when a white man forces his way into their back-yards, and, without hiring them to calcimine his straw hat, or so much as offering to sell them policy tickets at reduced prices, mentions that he wants to make a map of their premises and to "interview" them for the benefit of the Herald. If these outraged kings try to brain the intruder with the nearest club, or draw indignant razors from their boots and proceed to hew him in pieces, we are told that he has no right to defend himself. It is possible that a few confirmed and hardened philanthropists may believe this monstrous doctrine, but it is safe to say that most of those who pretend to believe it are perfectly well aware of its intrinsic absurdity.

The real origin of all this professed dissatisfaction with STANLEY is probably the profound disappointment which is felt both in England and America because Sergt. BATES was not selected, instead of STANLEY, to carry flags through Central Africa. The Sergeant has carried the American flag through the Southern States and through England, with the vain hope that somebody would kill him. Two nations shared this hope, and everybody watched his footsteps, but they were bitterly disappointed. Now, it is reasonably certain that were Sergt. BATES to carry a flag into Central Africa, the native kings would promptly meet his views by slaying him and tearing his flag into pieces. When we read that instead of thus serving the cause of humanity, they are attacking STANLEY, and get themselves shot for their pains, we cannot but regret to see so much energy wasted. The rash philanthropist is so exasperated by this thought that he visits his indignation on the innocent STANLEY, and thus becomes both absurd and unjust. Instead of doing this, let him organize a new expedition, with Sergt. BATES at its head, and send it into Africa without a weapon of any kind. There is no fear that the native kings will not be equal to the occasion. They are rude, ignorant barbarians, but show them Sergt. BATES with a large flag and without a rifle, and we shall speedily find that whatever may be their faults, their hearts are in the right place.

OBITUARY.

COMMODORE ALFRED G. GRAY.

Commodore Alfred G. Gray, the senior commander of the Pacific Mail Steam-ship Company, died at his residence in Brooklyn at 6 o'clock yesterday morning, after an illness of more than two months. The late Commodore's father was for many years British Consul at Norfolk, Va., where his son Alfred was born in July, 1818. The boy went to sea in 1835, and became a Captain in 1845, and since the latter date his active service was continuous. When twenty-five years old, and while yet a Lieutenant, he commanded the Texan sloop-of-war Austin. On May 16, 1843, after having waited several days for wind enough to manœuvre the Austin and the Wharton, he succeeded in drawing out to battle, off Campeachy, the Mexican vessels-of-war Montezuma, Guadaloupe, and Regenerador, (steamers,) and two brigs and two schooners, under the command of Admiral Don Tomas de Nearna. In the afternoon the Mexican ships were withdrawn into channels with which Admiral Nearna was familiar, and where the Texans could not follow him. In this action five of the Austin's crew were killed, or died of wounds, while the total of killed and wounded was twenty-five. In his log, of this action Commodore Gray said: "The Austin was struck eleven times; eight times by a 68-pound solid shot, once by a 42, ones by a 32, and by two pieces of shell. Either the Guadaloupe or the Montezuma, with their steam and batteries, should have been able to sink both the Austin and the Wharton in one-half the time, (of the engagement,) had they been properly managed and commanded by brave men." Before the close of this year he came to New-York to seek professional employment, but found that his connection with the Texan Navy was "all against him." Disgusted, angry, and almost destitute, the fiery young Captain managed to raise money enough to pay his way to St. John, N. B., where a brother resided, and where, as he notes in his log, "if I could not get employment, I should at least have shelter." His experience of sailing vessels dated from June, 1835, until Dec. 1851, (sixteen years,) during which period he crossed the equator sixteen times, and on various meridians between 20 west and 135 east. The first steam-ship in which he ever sailed was the Philadelphia, in which he made several voyages between New-Orleans and Aspinwall as first mate. In the same year (1853) he was made Captain of the steam-ship Falcon, of the same line and route. Afterward he commanded the El Dorado of the same line, and subsequently the Crescent City between New-York and New-Orleans, the George Law, Empire City, Prometheus, Star of the West, Moses Taylor, Baltic, and Atlantic, these steam-ships having been run under his command, several of them to Central America, the Gulf, and Southern ports, and one to Southampton and Havre, between 1853 and 1861. On April 7, 1861, Capt. Gray entered the service of the United States Government in command of the Atlantic as a chartered steamer. From this he was transferred in September, 1861, to the command of the army transport McClellan, in which he served three years and made twenty-three cruises. THE NEW-YORK TIMES of October, 1861, had a long letter from a naval officer, who was on board at the time, concerning an action in which the McClellan was engaged at the mouth of the Mississippi, and in this letter Capt. Gray was commended in the highest terms. While Captain of this vessel he repeatedly received the thanks and the praise of department commanders with whom he had official relations. In 1865 he was appointed to command the Henry Chauncey, then new. This was his first service in the Pacific Mail Company as that company was then and has since been constituted. From this vessel he was transferred in 1868 to the Alaska, then new, and running to Aspinwall. In 1870 the Alaska went to the Pacific, when Capt. Gray took command of the Rising Star for a brief period, when he resumed the Chauncey, where he remained until October, 1873, when he was appointed to the new iron propeller Acapulco, which he commanded till August of this year. The last entry in his log is dated "Wednesday, Aug. 30." He left the Acapulco the next day, and went to his home in Brooklyn, and never left his room afterward. He had been offered the command of every steam-ship built by the Pacific Mail Steam-ship Company since the Chauncey, but declined, on account of the establishment here of his family, to sail out of any port except New-York.

It is not too much to claim for him to say that no other American Captain ever won or maintained a greater popularity with passengers. As an ocean commander he was conspicuously what owners and underwriters call "lucky." He had made 120 round voyages between New-York and Aspinwall for the Pacific Mail Steam-ship Company, and carried hundreds of millions of treasure, of which he never lost a dollar's worth. He had sailed nearly a million miles as Captain, and never lost a life by an accident. In 1874 he was promoted to be Commodore of the Pacific Mail Steam-ship Company, which at that date made him the chief of thirty-three captains. He has left a widow and five children, three sons and two daughters. The eldest daughter was married to Mr. Rufus Hatch on Oct. 8 last.

OBITUARY NOTE.

Announcement was made at the Produce Exchange, yesterday, of the death of Mr. Frederick Sydney Parsons, a member of the Exchange, and a very popular young ship merchant. He was in his twenty-third year at the time of his death. He was the youngest son of William G. Parsons, of New-Brunswick, New-Jersey, and had recently been admitted into the firm of Messrs. George Slocovich & Co., with which house he had been connected for eight years.

NOTES FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—There is no record at the Executive Mansion of a pardon having been issued for McKee, now in jail at St. Louis, for complicity in the whisky frauds. It is certain that no warrant for his pardon has yet been signed, though friends of McKee express the absolute conviction that pardons will be issued for both McKee and Avery, on the return of the President to this city.

The receipts from internal revenue to-day were $236,350 70, and from Customs $519,304 25.

James L. Kinningham was to-day appointed Revenue Storekeeper for the Eighth District of Kentucky.

The Post Office Department to-day ordered the further issue of Centennial stamped envelopes to be discontinued. This order is in accordance with the notice given when they were first issued at the opening of the Centennial Exhibition. All that have been sold and remain unused will still be valid.

NEW STOCK BOARD IN SAN FRANCISCO.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 10.—A new stock board, to be called the Nevada Stock and Exchange Board, is being organized, to go into operation Dec. 1. It will be devoted mainly to dealings in Government bonds, stocks, State and county securities, gas and water stocks, and mining stocks.

THE EXHIBITION CLOSED

CEREMONIES OF THE DAY.

ADDRESSES BY MESSRS. MORRELL, WELSH, GOSHORN, AND HAWLEY—PRESIDENT GRANT DECLARES THE EXHIBITION CLOSED—THE CROWD AND THE WEATHER.

From our Special Correspondent.

PHILADELPHIA, Friday, Nov. 10, 1876.

The Centennial Exhibition is ended. With the gathering of the shadows of evening its great doors were closed; the gates opened only to let out the last lingering group of visitors; the great engine in Machinery Hall was lifeless; the thousand wheels to which it gave motion were still; the long avenues of the Main Building were deserted and silent; night settled down upon all, and the Centennial Exhibition passed into history. The formal ceremonies of closing had been arranged on a scale of magnitude fully equal to those of the opening; nor was the attendance of visitors much less numerous than on the 10th of May, when, amid the roar of cannon, the crash of a thousand instruments, and the thundering chorus from 200,000 people, the President of the nation announced from the front of Memorial Hall that the Exhibition was open. But on that memorable occasion a bright sun smiled upon the scene and made open-air ceremonies possible. Yesterday's steady fall of rain, a leaden sky, and a raw, cold wind, rendered it absolutely necessary that whatever was done should be done under cover, and, there being no adequate preparation for this contingency, only a very small fraction of the enormous crowd present on the grounds were able to participate in the ceremonies of the day. It was unfortunate in some respects; yet when one saw how thoroughly the mass of people were enjoying themselves and making the most of the last hours of the Exhibition, it seemed that they did not feel the disappointment of their exclusion from Judges' Hall with any distressing keenness. While the opening proceedings were arranged for in the avenue between the Main Building and Memorial Hall, the arrangements for to-day contemplated the use of the wide space between the west end of the building and Machinery Hall for the closing ceremonies. In front of the doors here a series of seats and an ample platform had been erected for the use of the speakers, the orchestra and chorus, and the invited guests. In front of this, again, a large semi-circular space was inclosed with ropes, and well supplied with benches, on which the audience would have been seated if the rain had not come in to spoil all the arrangements. Carpenters were at work putting the finishing touches to the platform at 10 o'clock this morning, and this being done, the whole was draped with flags. Proceedings were to commence at 2 o'clock, but long before that hour the rain began to fall heavily; the gay drapery hung bedraggled and dripping, large pools of water flooded the ground to be occupied by the audience, the people began to desert the ground, and take refuge in the various buildings, and the gentlemen who had charge of the ceremonies decided to hold them in the Judges' Hall. Utter confusion followed this enforced and sudden change of programme. Very few people knew of it at all, and under a canopy of umbrellas hundreds arrayed themselves before the platform when the hour of 2 came, and continued waiting and wondering until some one kindly came to the front and announced the change. There was a rush for Judges' Hall, but on arriving there no one was admitted without a special pass. People who had received passes to the outside platform reasonably supposed that the presentation of these would admit them to the hall, but this was not to be. "You must have a hall pass," was the invariable response of policemen and guards to every damp and anxious applicant. Where could the passes be obtained, was the next question; and it appeared that they could be obtained at the office inside the Hall, which could not be reached without a pass, and which having been reached, there was no necessity for one. Probably the gentlemen in charge did the best they could in the emergency; but it must be said their best was but a poor one.

From another quarter, and with considerable trouble, some two or three persons whose business it was to be inside, obtained the necessary permit, and entered the hall by a side way, the front approach being entirely blocked up by the crowd and the Police. By this time the ceremonies had already commenced, but the hall was not two-thirds full. The orchestra of 110 pieces, under Theodore Thomas occupied the gallery, the chorus of 400 selected from the Philadelphia singing societies, was crammed into the opposite one. The platform was occupied by the speakers and distinguished guests; a semi-circular space in front of this was kept clear by the staff officers of the State Governors present; the First Cavalry Troop of Philadelphia, acting as body-guard to the President, guarded a passage from the platform to the front entrance, and the select audience moved freely about in the remaining space. The central figure on the platform was President Grant, whose square-shouldered, thick-set figure, stern face, and plain, not to say shabby, attire, made him conspicuous among the throng of carefully-dressed and smiling gentlemen who surrounded him. On his right sat Gen. Hawley, Don Cameron, and George W. Childs; on the left, Hon. D. J. Morrill, Secretary Fish, Hon. John Welsh, Rev. Dr. Seiss, Mrs. Gillespie, chief of the Women's Department; and Gen. Robert Patterson. On the second row were Gov. Hartranft, Gov. Rice, of Massachusetts; Gov. Bedle, of New-Jersey; Gov. Cochrane, of Delaware; Chief Justice Waite, Judge David Davis, Sir Edward Thornton, Gen. Banks, Aristachi Bey, Turkish Minister; Col. Thomas Scott, Bishop Simpson, Hon. Asa Packer, Bayard Taylor, Prof. Blake, Count D'Assi, President of the Italian Commission; Hon. Thomas H. Dudley, of New-Jersey; Mayor Stokley, of Philadelphia; and others.

The ceremonies were opened with the performance of Wagner's celebrated "Inauguration March," after which Rev. Joseph A. Seiss made a brief and eloquent prayer. Then came a chorale and fugue of Bach's, and when the applause had subsided, Hon. D. J. Morrill, United States Centennial Commissioner from Pennsylvania, rose and delivered an address. After referring at some length to the difficulties under which the Exhibition started, and the various agencies which had contributed to its success, he continued:

The members of the commission and the Board of Finance have recognized that they were on exhibition as fully as any material object inclosed within these grounds; that thousands of eyes would scan their every act, after the fashion of these times, which is to attribute mercenary or corrupt motives to all engaged in the execution of public trusts; and I shall esteem above the prizes the nation has won in the Exhibition, an award from that higher group of judges which represents the conscience of this world, that this work which we to-day commit to history is free from taint—that good men shall say it was honest. That managers of future Centennial celebrations to be held on these grounds will see and do things more wonderful than our wildest dreams, and the remnants of our finest things may be exhibited as proofs of the rudeness of early days; but in the records we have made the full measure of our manhood will go down to them untouched by the gnawing tooth of time. Of the Exhibition, now to be numbered with the things of the past, it is difficult to speak. The nations are here; they have made this great spectacle what it is, and they deserve the gratitude of the American people. While they have taught much, they have also learned something; and they have seen in the crowds of American citizens of all occupations and conditions of life who have thronged these grounds a polite, orderly, self-respecting and self-governing people. So far as their representatives have entered into our social life, we will hope they have found that what may be lacking in form is made up in substance; that the simplicity of republican manners is dignified by the sentiment of good will to men. The Exhibition was opened by starting in motion the Corliss engine, that giant of wonder to all, which for six months, with equal pulse, without haste, without rest, has propelled an endless system of bolts and wheels. Silent and irresistible, it affects the imagination as realizing the fabled powers of genii and afrite in Arabian tales, and, like them, it is subject to subtle control. When these our ceremonies here are ended, the President of the United States, by the motion of his hand, will make the lightning his messenger to stop the revolution of its wheels, and at the same instant to tell the world that the International Exhibition, which marked the Centennial of American national life, is closed.

Selections from the "Dettingen Te Deum" were then sung by the chorus, with orchestral accompaniment.

ADDRESS OF HON. JOHN WELSH.

Following the address of Hon. D. J. Morrell, the orchestra and chorus performed selections from the "Dettingen Te Deum," and then came the address of Hon. John Welsh, President of the Centennial

Board of Finance, whose rising was greeted with loud and long applause. Mr. Welsh said:

FELLOW-CITIZENS: In this closing scene of the International Exhibition I may well give expression to the grateful emotions which swell my heart, that all who have shared in the labor of its preparation and conduct in your approval of it meet their coveted reward. The predictions of evil which were made of it—and by many in high places—have not been realized. The nation has not been dishonored. The good name of its people has not been imperilled. This day witnesses that the noble purpose of its projectors has been accomplished. It has hallowed the Centennial year by an inspiration of the past. The circumstances attendant on the nation's birth have been recalled. The patriotic impulses of the people have been quickened. Their love for their country has been strengthened. The Exhibition has concentrated here species of the varied products of the United States, and made better known to us our vast resources. It has placed side by side, for comparison, the industries of the world. In viewing them the utilitarian revels in the realization that man is striving earnestly to make all things contribute to his convenience and comfort; the philosopher stands in awe at their contemplation as he dwells upon the cherished thought of the possible unity of nations; and he who looks on the grandeur of the scene from a spiritual stand-point is filled with the hope that the day is near "when the glory of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea." It has taught us in what others excel, and excited our ambition to strive to equal them. It has been the occasion of a delightful union among the representatives of many nations, marked by an intelligent appreciation of each other, rich in instruction and fruitful in friendships. It has placed before our own people, as a school for their instruction, a display—vast and varied beyond precedent—comprising the industries of the world, including almost every product known to science and to art. It has made the country and its institutions known to intelligent representatives of all nations. It has concentrated on this spot, in the short term of six months, 8,000,000 of visitors, who have enjoyed all its rare privileges without a disturbance or any personal hindrance from violence, or even rudeness. It has exhibited the American people in their true character, respectful of each other's rights, considerate of each other's convenience, and desirous of allowing to others a full participation in their enjoyment. It has afforded an opportunity to show that the administration of an exhibition on a grand scale may be liberal in its expenditure without useless extravagance; that its laws may be strictly enforced without impartiality and without harshness; that its regulations may secure the efficiency of its departments and uniformity in their action; that its whole course has been free from financial embarrassment, or even a payment deferred; and that notwithstanding every part of its machinery was in constant motion, no one of the immense throng within the limits of the Exhibition was sensible of its restraint. The International Exhibition is to be regarded as a reverential tribute to the century which has just expired. That century has been recalled. Its events have been reviewed. Its fruits are gathered. Its memories are hallowed. Let us enter on the new century with a renewed devotion to our country, with the highest aims for its honor, and for the purity, integrity, and welfare of its people.

And now, to my fellow-laborers of the United States Centennial Commission, and of my more immediate associates in the Centennial Board of Finance, I need only say that our work has its place in the annals of the nation. If the memories of it be pleasant to our countrymen, we have done well.

ADDRESS OF HON. A. T. GOSHORN.

The rendition of the splendid finale from Beethoven's fifth symphony by the orchestra preceded the address of Hon. A. T. Goshorn, Director General, who was received with much applause. Mr. Goshorn said:

MR. PRESIDENT: The high sunlight that came last May to greet the opening hour of the International Exhibition of 1876 was a propitious omen. Those who had labored from its inception to place before the world in a proper manner an enterprise in which great expectations and interests were concentrated were encouraged and strengthened in this work. It has since prospered and won the favor of general commendation. Millions of people have come hither to enjoy the teachings of a school that has laid the foundation for more liberal thought and for a more extended knowledge of the social, industrial, and political elements that contribute to the welfare of man. The beneficial results that will ensue from these teachings cannot be over-estimated. This Exhibition has been a great educator. It has given the people of other nations new and correct ideas of the resources and institutions of America. It has given the people of America enlarged information of the arts, products and wealth of the participating nations. It has also augmented and strengthened social and commercial relations between nations, which are results of high importance, and may be considered a happy consummation of the objects of this international work. Had it accomplished less than this it would have failed of the hopes of its projectors.

But the hour has arrived when we must dismantle these buildings and take our departure. * * *

Having been for almost four years intimately connected with the internal and external administration of this work, I feel that we have abundant cause for congratulation that the close of our labors terminates in the midst of a success that is manifestly satisfactory to our country, and approved by the patriotism of our people. In this great undertaking, we had from the beginning the zealous co-operation and faithful services of both the officials and exhibitors in the various departments, to whom we are pleased in this manner and on this important occasion to acknowledge our indebtedness. To our friends, the foreign Commissioners and foreign exhibitors, I am glad of another opportunity to express and repeat our most cordial greetings and thanks for the valuable part they have taken in this Exhibition. Without such co-operation it would not have attained the dignity and interest which has so profitably affected the people of the United States. Your presence, gentlemen, has been accepted by the people of this country as a mission of international good will and profitable intercourse. I pray you, therefore, to carry with you the convictions of the friendly feelings of this Government and this people toward you for your honorable and successful co-operation. I also have the pleasure to congratulate my fellow-citizens, the exhibitors from the United States. You have contributed abundantly of the rich products of the soil and mines and of your own ingenious and skillful workmanship; you have won fresh honors in every department and have revealed and made better known to our people and to the world your strength and progress and the vast resources at your command. Your contributions and intelligent co-operations entitle you to claim a large share both of the credit and benefits of this Exhibition. If the influences of this Exhibition should discourage all inclinations to the showy and superficial, and elevate the standard of quality and workmanship, and thereby add to the intrinsic merits and values of our products, it will produce its legitimate results and justify the expenditures of thought and treasure that have been lavished upon it.

But I cannot conclude without alluding to the efficient and faithful work of my co-officials and of my personal staff, which commands my highest acknowledgments of respect and esteem. The amount of labor and thought which has devolved on you, gentlemen, can never be known, nor need it be. We have our record in the consciousness of the confidence placed in us and in the support we have always received from the United States Centennial Commissioners and Centennial Board of Finance, and from the numerous contributors, here and elsewhere, who laid the foundation for this Exhibition, and from the public.

And now, Mr. President, with the close of this day, another International Exhibition will be concluded and added to the records of the past. But it will not be ended; it will rather have only begun. The real exhibition we have striven for is not limited to the display of material products, which, however pleasing, must be brief. The teachings, the social and moral influences, the improvement of the productive powers of genius and inventive knowledge, constitute in part the object and aim. May these be fully recognized as the legitimate results of this Exhibition.

GEN. HAWLEY'S ADDRESS.

As Mr. Goshorn sat down, the orchestra and choir took up the "Hallelujah Chorus." At its conclusion, and after a slight pause to permit the emotions which this thrilling hymn of praise excites to subside, Gen. Hawley rose, and spoke as follows:

The final day of the Exhibition has arrived. Four years and a half ago, the Centennial Commission was organized under the legislation of the National Government to celebrate the Centennial anniversary of our national independence, by holding an International Exhibition of arts, manufactures, and products of the soil and mine. The National Congress deemed it fitting that the completion of the first century of our national existence should be commemorated by a presentation of the natural resources of the country and their development, and of its progress in those arts which benefit mankind, in comparison with those of older nations. Happily the United States was and is at peace with the whole world. International exhibitions have become an established factor in modern civilization, but connected with this were features of peculiar and local interest. They have not interfered with its progress; indeed, the acceptances of other nations and the very friendly congratulatory letters addressed to the President of the United States on the occasion of the celebration of the Fourth of July shows that they have rather given an opportunity for expressions of cordial good-will that have given very great pleasure to the whole American people. There were many and great difficulties in the path of the enterprise—the usual misapprehensions, the disturbed condition of business and finance at home and abroad, and the slow conversion of public sentiment which in the earlier days feared that justice might not be done to American resources and capabilities. We recall the hours of uncertainty and discouragement solely that we may felicitate ourselves upon results that have answered the hopes and predictions of the most sanguine. The Exhibition has given us a better comprehension of our position and progress. We expected and hoped to be taught our shortcomings in some respects, and we shall profit by the lessons. And yet I gathered from my countrymen the general impression that they are not a little pleased to see how well our productions in many departments have borne the comparison to which they have been subjected. Unquestionably, international trade and commerce will be promoted; our manufacturers, mechanics and artists will show by their work that they have been close students of the admirable exhibits from abroad, and have taken advantage thereof. The ingenuity and excellence of our mechanics and inventors will be made better known. A high benefit has been wrought. The bonds of peace have been strengthened. Innumerable ties have been created that will be strongly felt wherever national disagreements are threatened. Our people are so widely scattered, and their relations have been so seriously disturbed that every patriot anxiously desired them to seize the great occasion to know each other better, that they may love each better. What has been done toward this is one of our most valuable labors. The concurrent and almost wholly harmonious testimony of our citizens, at home and abroad, permit us to feel that we have on the whole been largely successful in all our work. This commendatory judgment is very grateful to us. My associates have given expression to our gratitude. I would gladly add to what they have said if I could. The Commission thanks the City of Philadelphia, the State of Pennsylvania, the National Government, and especially you, sir, our honored President. It thanks the Foreign Commissioners, one and all, most heartily. It thanks the exhibitors of all nations. It thanks the American people, whose conduct here has commanded unbroken respect. It thanks warmly its associate corporation, the Board of Finance. Above all, it reverently acknowledges the kind favor of heaven, which has so smiled upon us that while we turn somewhat sadly from these scenes of great labor and greater pleasure, all who have been associated here may feel that they have done something toward advancing the world to the better day coming. God be praised for the past. God send us all, individuals and nations, a happy future.

Mr. President, we await your pleasure.

The President half rose to speak, but it was on the programme that the hymn "America" should be sung at this point; therefore, Gen. Hawley, recollecting himself, waved his hand to the gallery, and orchestra, chorus, and audience in unison began the hymn and sang two verses of it. While this was being done, the large windows at the end of the hall were thrown open, and the original flag of the American Union, first displayed by Commodore Paul Jones on the Bon Homme Richard, was unfurled; while a salute of forty-seven guns, one for each State and Territory, was fired from George's Hill by the Keystone Battery, and simultaneously from the United States steam-ship Plymouth, in the harbor.

Now came the last act in the ceremonies. President Grant rose and stepped to the front of the platform. A tremendous burst of applause greeted him. He bowed slightly and with military stiffness, and, turning first to those around him, then to the general audience, said in quiet tones:

"MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN—I now declare the Centennial International Exhibition closed."

"Give the signal," said Gen. Hawley at the same instant, and turning to the telegraph operator behind him. The signal—'76—was given, and while a thousand gongs rang out their last alarm there, the great Corliss engine in Machinery Hall gave one or two expiring strokes and stopped. Its work was done. At the same time, the following message was sent to London, to Canada, and throughout the Union:

CENTENNIAL GROUNDS, PHILADELPHIA, UNITED STATES, Friday, Nov. 10, 1876.
The President has this moment closed the International Centennial Exhibition—3:37 P. M.

The last act of the programme was the singing of the Doxology by the audience and chorus, accompanied by the orchestra. The remainder of the hours before closing were spent chiefly in the buildings, for the rain still continued to fall, and at dark the gates were closed forever.

THE BUILDINGS TO REMAIN OPEN DURING THE REMOVAL OF EXHIBITS—STATISTICS.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 10.—Although the Exhibition was formally closed to-day, it has been officially announced that the grounds and buildings will be kept open to the public for the next ten days. As the exhibits will probably be removed very slowly, it will still give persons who have delayed their visit an opportunity to see the Exhibition without encountering the crowd which has thronged the buildings for the past few weeks.

All photograph tickets running to Nov. 10 will hereafter admit the persons to whom they were issued upon presentation.

The total officially reported admissions up to and including Wednesday last, were as follows:

To Live Stock Exhibition	90,448
To Main Exhibition, at 25 cents	651,983
To Main Exhibition, at 50 cents	6,978,552
Total	7,720,983

The estimated cash admissions for Thursday were 176,756, and for to-day 106,474, making a grand total of 8,004,214.

The cash receipts from the gates, officially reported, up to and including Wednesday, were $3,674,884 74.

THE CENTENNIAL HOTELS.

THEIR PROFITS DURING THE EXPOSITION—NUMBER OF GUESTS ENTERTAINED.

From the Philadelphia Times, Nov. 10.

A Times representative yesterday called upon the proprietors and managers of the leading Centennial hotels in West Philadelphia—those built expressly for the accommodation of visitors to the Exhibition—to ascertain their purposes, now that the great fair is nearly over, and whether or not their season had been successful. Mr. Rice, of the Globe, said his house had made "plenty of money," and was reaping a tremendous harvest at this time. He opened May 1, and since that time had housed and fed at least 200,000 people, his daily average being about 1,400. His intention was to remain open as long as business paid, and certainly until December 1. The manager of the Grand Exposition, which consists of 140 houses, with 1,325 rooms, said his house had been full ever since he opened on May 1. He had accommodated 196,000 persons in all. The hotel will be closed Dec. 1, and the houses of which it consists sold for private residences. The Atlas has averaged 1,200 guests daily since the opening of the Exhibition, and the manager said his season had been extremely successful. He will close about Dec. 1, when the building will be demolished. Col. Duffy, of the Transcontinental, said his average had been 1,100 persons daily, and be estimated that at the close of the Exhibition he will have provided for 200,000 persons. The hotel is to be permanent. The United States, which was opened on Jan. 15, 1876, will remain open until that date in 1877. It will then be altered into dwellings. Its daily average has been about 500, and its total 125,000. The Hotel Aubry, which opened on April 29, has had 300 guests every day since, and has taken care in all of 50,000 people. After Monday it will be continued on the American plan. The Channing House has averaged 275 guests every day, and had an aggregate of 50,000. It will close on Saturday, and then be altered into dwelling houses. The Westminster, which averaged 160 daily, and provided for about 20,000 in all, closed on Monday. Congress Hall, which has a daily average of 600, and has accommodated 180,000 people, will remain open as long as business pays. It is a substantial brick building, and will not be taken down. The Belmont, with 400 daily, and a total of 30,000, will close on Saturday. All its furniture and effects are to be sold at private sale, after which the building will be destroyed. The Grand Villa, which has had 200 daily and a total of 24,000, will remain open until Dec. 1. It will then be transformed into private residences. The Ross House, Lancaster, Elm Avenue, Metropolitan, Cosmopolitan, and International Hotels have together had 114,000. They are all substantial brick houses, and will be kept open as long as they do a paying business. Afterward they will be used either for dwellings or manufactories. The following table exhibits the number of guests at all the Centennial hotels in West Philadelphia since the opening of the Exhibition.

	Average.	Total.
Globe	1,400	200,000
Grand Exposition	1,350	196,000

THE STEAM-SHIP FRANKLIN.

ORDERS TO THE POWHATTAN TO BE READY TO PROCEED TO THE ASSISTANCE OF THE FRANKLIN IF NECESSARY.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—A telegram was last night sent by Secretary Robeson to the Captain of the United States steamer Powhattan at Norfolk, to proceed to sea in search of the Franklin, which was, in consequence of the report of the bark Norma, which yesterday arrived in New-York, thought to be proceeding home in distress. Subsequently, however, the commandant at the New-York Navy-yard was telegraphed to ascertain from the Captain of the Norma his opinion as to whether it was the Franklin in distress, and as he had no particular reason for believing that the ship he saw was in distress, the orders to the Powhattan have been revoked, but she is directed to be in readiness to proceed to the assistance of the Franklin if it should be necessary. The Powhattan is ready to go to sea, and Capt. Russell, in command of that vessel, so reported to the department this morning. Unless the subsequent order of the department holding her was received, she would be likely to sail to-day. Naval officers here do not believe the ship the Norma sighted was the Franklin, and furthermore they are not apprehensive of any accident having happened to her. If the Powhattan should have started she will be stopped at Fortress Monroe, telegrams for that purpose having been sent there.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

THE PROPOSED CONFERENCE ACCEPTED BY RUSSIA—THE FRENCH REPRESENTATIVE APPOINTED—TCHERNAYEFF.

PARIS, Nov. 10.—The Count of Chandordy has been appointed French delegate to the conference of the powers on the Eastern question. It is expected that the conference will begin its session in about a fortnight.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 10.—The Porte has not yet replied to England's conference proposal.

BELGRADE, Nov. 10.—Gen. Tchernayeff has resolved to remain permanently in Servia.

LONDON, Nov. 11.—The Post publishes an official announcement of Russia's formal acceptance of the English proposal for a conference at Constantinople on the basis of the integrity and independence of Turkey. The proposal, as accepted by Russia, includes the condition that the powers jointly and severally renounce all intention of aggrandizement.

The Standard's dispatch from Belgrade, says Gen. Tchernayeff will remain there to organize a Russian legion which will garrision Belgrade, as a precaution against the discontent of the people.

The Foreign Office publishes a long dispatch, dated Nov. 10, which Lord Derby has sent to Lord Loftus, the British Ambassador to Russia, for transmission to Prince Gortschakoff.

The following extract, in which Lord Derby relates a conversation he had with Gen. Schouvaloff, the Russian Minister at London, shows the nature of the relations only recently existing between Russia and England:

"Gen. Schouvaloff expressed doubts to me whether Russia would accept the six months armistice offered by the Porte. I thought it right to warn Gen. Schouvaloff that however strong might be the national indignation against the Turkish cruelties, it might be superseded by a very different sentiment if the English nation once believed Constantinople was threatened. I told him everyone here would believe Russia's rejection of an armistice indicated a fixed purpose for war against Turkey; and entreated him to use every effort to make the Russian Government understand the light in which the English people would view such a resolution."

The Post says the Marquis of Salisbury will go to Constantinople by way of Vienna.

Accounts continue to be received of the deplorable condition of the Servian army. The Times correspondent at Viena says, on Oct. 29, Gen. Horvatovitch's force, consisting of Servian militia, and nominally numbering 22,000, had been reduced by desertions to 4,000. Gen. Tchernayeff's army suffered in the same way. A leading Russian newspaper asserts that 9,000 Servians mutilated themselves, and 10,000 deserted. These losses amounted to about a sixth part of the Servian army.

Reports of war-like preparations in Russia continue. The St. Petersburg Gazette and Viedomosti speak of the impending mobilization of the army. The latter journal asserts that orders for mobilization will be issued to-morrow.

A Belgrade dispatch to the Daily News says a Capt. Brown, of Chicago, has received the Servian gold cross for gallantry in the battle of Alexinatz, where he lost a leg.

THE DU SOMMERARD DISCLAIMER.

FOREIGN BUSINESS MATTERS.

INACTIVITY IN GRAIN IN LIVERPOOL—UNUSUALLY LARGE COTTON OPERATIONS IN "SPOT" AND FUTURES—THE BRAZILIAN COFFEE MARKETS.

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 10.—A leading grain circular, issued to-day, says the weather, which has changed to frost, is very severe for this early season, but it is unlikely to be permanent, and has not improved the markets, which, on the contrary, have continued very inactive, wheat ruling generally 6d. to 1s. per quarter cheaper. There are only six cargoes on sale off the coast. About sixteen thousand quarters were taken for the Continent within the week. Since Tuesday there has been little doing in "spot" wheat; buyers have had a slight advantage. Maize is firmer. There was a thin attendance of millers at this market to-day. There were moderate transactions in wheat, and sales beyond retail quantities were only affected at a reduction of 1d. per cental for both white and red. In flour there was nothing doing, and prices were nominally rather lower. There was little doing in corn. Sellers ask an advance of 3d. per quarter, which, though quotable, is not readily obtainable.

The Cotton Brokers' Association circular, in reviewing the trade for the week ending last night, says: "Cotton has again been in very extensive demand from all classes of buyers, and the market is very animated. Quotations have considerably advanced. American has continued in very active request throughout the week, and with a reduced supply was sparingly offered; prices have advanced about 1/8d. per pound. For Sea Island the demand was only moderate, and prices are unchanged. In futures business was very large, and there is a further advance of about 3/8d."

LONDON, Nov. 10.—The Times' Liverpool special cotton report, referring to the sale of 51,000 bales to speculators, mentioned in the weekly report, says: "This is a larger 'spot' speculation than there has been for years."

RIO JANEIRO, Nov. 9.—Coffee market quiet; prices maintained; no change. Rio—Good Firsts, 6,100@6,250 reis per 10 kilos. Exchange on London, 25.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

THE COTTON SPINNERS OF BLACKBURN, ENGLAND—THE KHEDIVE'S CABINET—DISARMING THE BASQUE PROVINCES.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—This morning's Post says an agreement has been reached between the master and operative cotton spinners of Blackburn by which the threatened great lock-out is averted. Other papers on the same information do not consider the matter as finally arranged, but regard an agreement as highly probable.

Reuter's telegram from Cairo reports that the Egyptian Minister of Finance has been dismissed and imprisoned for conspiring against the Khédive. Hussein, the Khédive's son, has been appointed Minister of Finance.

LONDON, Nov. 11.—The Times' dispatch from Paris reports that the Senate has appointed a committee on the Gatineau Bill. The majority of the committee are opposed to the measure, and it seems unquestionable that the Senate will reject it.

VITTORIA, Nov. 10.—Gen. Loma has ordered the inhabitants of the Basque Provinces to immediately deliver all their arms to the authorities. The Government's decision to exempt all the Basque Provinces from the operation of the constitutional guarantees has created a painful impression. Mass will be said to-morrow for the repose of the soul of the Duchess of Aosta.

STEADFAST IOWA.

The Burlington Hawk-Eye thus glories over Iowa: "The gallant Hawk-eye State stands proudly erect with a majority that will go above 50,000. Whatever the Republicans of other States may have done, or failed to do, the Republicans of Iowa have the proud consciousness that they have not been remiss in their duty. It is a division of the great Republican Army that has made no backward movement. It holds its ground with unbroken ranks. The barrel of money was powerless to affect honest Iowa. We can neither be bought nor driven from our position of loyalty to the Union and faithfulness to every trust. Iowa was one of the first States to wheel into the Republican line when the party was organized, and it stands by its colors! Nine cheers for gallant, brave, fearless Iowa."

THE PENNSYLVANIA COAL TRADE.

The following statistics are given by the Pottsville (Penn.) Miners' Journal: "The quantity of coal sent from the Schuylkill region for the week ending Nov. 4 was, by rail, 107,683 tons; by canal, 29,755 tons; total, 137,438 tons, against 88,555 tons for the same week of last year; increase, 48,883 tons. The quantity sent for the year was 3,624,821 tons, against 3,867,904 tons for the corresponding period of last year; decrease, 242,183 tons. The quantity sent from all the regions for the week was, anthracite, 568,558 tons; bituminous, 82,314 tons; total, 650,869 tons, against 476,521 tons anthracite, and 83,246 tons bituminous; total, 559,767 tons—for the same week of last year. LOSSES BY FIRE.

LARGE FIRE AT TARRYTOWN, WESTCHESTER COUNTY.

The largest and most disastrous fire that has taken place in Westchester County for a long time occurred at an early hour yesterday morning at Tarrytown, in close proximity to the railroad depot, whereby a full block of wooden buildings, including seven stores, two manufactories, one stable, and a public hall, were destroyed. The fire was discovered about 1 o'clock, but as the mains in the village are defective no water with which to quench the flames could be procured, and all that could be done was to save as much property as possible. Four of the buildings, including Irving Hall, were owned by Jordan L. Mott whose insurance amounts to $8,000. Two others were owned by John F. Shaw, who occupied one as a saloon, the other being occupied as a bakery by Otto Bauman. The former's insurance is $8,000, and the latter's $500. The following are the other insurances: Shanahan & Costello, carriage factory, $7,000; C. W. Hyatt, jewelry, $200; E. Synher, vegetables, $500; Vantassel & Jones, grocery, $500; John Coffee, saloon, $300; Abraham Storms, sarsparilla manufactory, $1,750; M. H. Whipple, livery stable, $7,000, and a stable belonging to the Olmstead estate, $1,000. The total loss will be between $45,000 and $50,000, about half of which is covered by the insurance. It is supposed that the fire was the work of incendiaries, or some person or persons connected with the buildings, who wished to defraud the insurance companies.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

AN IMPORTANT REFERENCE VOLUME, PUBLISHED THIS DAY.
A GENERAL INDEX TO APPLETON'S ANNUAL CYCLOPEDIA.
Embracing the years 1861 to 1875, inclusive.
The facts and events collected in this series of volumes of the ANNUAL CYCLOPEDIA are so momentous that, in order to keep this index within reasonable limits, it has been found necessary to generalize them extensively. Thus, those relating to the history of a State or Nation, will be mostly found under the title of such State or Nation. Facts in Science are placed under the Department of Science, to which they belong. Proceedings of Organizations are generally to be found under the title of such organizations, unless they are of a very important nature. Individuals are specially noticed whenever their actions give importance to affairs and upon their decease.
Some of the events of the period comprised in these volumes, rank among the most important in modern history. Of wars, there is the American Civil War, the Austrian, the Italian, and German war, besides others of less note.
The emancipation of the United States, the establishment of the French Republic, the centralization of Germany, the Union of Italy, the Revolution in Spain, the Vatican Council, are among the most prominent in civil and religious affairs. But it is the peaceful progress of events that surpasses those of any other period of modern history, and these are fully recorded in the ANNUAL CYCLOPEDIA.
Price of the Index in cloth, $3 50; sheep, $4.

I.
A CAPITAL BOOK FOR BOYS.
THE BOY EMIGRANTS.
By NOAH BROOKS.
Profusely illustrated by Moran, Sheppard, and other artists. One vol., 12mo, attractively bound in cloth, $1 50.
THE BOY EMIGRANTS is a story of the adventures of a party of young gold-seekers on the Overland Emigrant Route, and in California during the early rush to the mines. Since the author was himself an emigrant of this description, the scenes and incidents are drawn from life, and the book may be accepted as a fresh and vivid picture of life on the Plains and in the mines, from an entirely novel point of view.
II.
ANOTHER VOLUME IN THE "EPOCHS OF MODERN HISTORY."
Edited by EDWARD E. MORRIS, M.A., and others.
THE EARLY PLANTAGENETS.
By WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford.
One vol., square 12mo, with two maps, cloth, $1.
From the London Saturday Review.
It is an admirable summary, and shows his wonderful power of cramming the greatest amount of information into the smallest space. Any one who has read through the period, either in the original writers or in any longer modern narrative, will do well to read it over again in the summary of Mr. Stubbs; and, when he has done so, he will only wish more earnestly to be able to read it again in a fuller narrative from the same hand.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,
No. 182 5th av., New-York,
PUBLISH NOV. 11:
I. THE HISTORY OF FRENCH LITERATURE. By HENRI VAN LAUN, Translator of Taine's "History of English Literature," the Works of Molière, &c., &c. Part I.—From its Origin to the Renaissance. 8vo, cloth extra. $2 50.
 For the intellectual history of France is certainly unique. It is the history of a race which has ever been in the van of modern European thought, which has conquered more by its mind than by its arms, which has conferred upon the world gifts whose value is not to be calculated by any material standard. It is the history of a nation to which the supremacy of the soul has always been as dear as the supremacy of the sword, and which has more than once asserted that supremacy at the very moment when its military and political influence have been most in dispute.
We have to deal with a people essentially spirited and intellectual, whose spirit and intellect have been invariably the wonder and admiration, if not the model and mold, of contemporary thought, and whose literary triumphs remain to this day among the most notable landmarks of modern literature. * * * Extract from Author's Preface.
II. ENGLISH THOUGHT IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By LESLIE STEPHENS, author of "Hours in a Library," &c. 2 vols., large octavo, cloth extra. $8.
 Thus the progress of the intellect necessarily involves a conflict. It implies destruction as correlative to growth. The history of thought is, in great part, a history of the gradual emancipation of the mind from the errors spontaneously generated by its first childlike attempts at speculative doctrines, which once appeared to be simple expressions of immediate observation, have contained a hypothetical element, gradually dissolved by contact with facts.—Extract from Author's Preface.
III. THE OUTLINES OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY. By JOHN J. ELMENDORF, S. T. D., University Professor of Philosophy in Racine College. 12mo, cloth. $1 50.
These outlines are intended to assist teachers and students to a free use of original sources, and while planned more especially for the class-room, will, it is thought, be found a serviceable guide to the general reader of philosophical literature.

This volume has been planned to present in clear and readable shape the first principles, or A B C, of financial science.
V. OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM AND THE NEW FAITH. By E. H. STEDMAN. 16mo, cloth, with portrait. 75c.
A clear and effective presentation of the purpose and principles of what is known as radicalism in religion, in an analysis of the life and works of one of its leading teachers.
VI. THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION, for SUNDAY-SCHOOLS AND HOMES. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM. New revised edition, tastefully printed and bound, square, 16 mo. cloth extra. $1.
VII. THE ATTITUDE OF MATERIALISM TOWARD THEOLOGY. By Rev. JAMES MARTINEAU, LL.D. Being a continuation of the argument of "Religion as Affected by Modern Materialism." 16 mo, cloth extra. 75c.
Clear, concise, and eloquent.—London Spectator.
VIII. RODDY'S IDEAL. By HELEN KENDRICK JOHNSON, author of "Roddy's Romance" and "Roddy's Reality. Square 16mo, illustrated. Cloth extra, $1 25.
This volume completes the popular Roddy series, and the set can now be obtained uniformly bound for $3 75. Of the "Romance" the Christian Union says: "A funny, quaint, delightful sort of a book." The "Reality" is called by the Springfield Republican "fresh and charming."
IX. THE HOUSE WITH SPECTACLES. By LECRA B. ROBINSON. Square 16mo. Cloth extra. $1 25.
A story for the young folks, full of bright originality.
The above are for sale by all booksellers, and are sent prepaid on receipt of price by the publishers.

BRYANT'S POETICAL WORKS.
A NEW ILLUSTRATED EDITION.
1 vol., small 4to. With 100 illustrations by Birket Foster, Harry Fenn, Fredericks and others. Price, in cloth, gilt edges, $4; morocco, extra, $8.
"Bryant is the most correct, the most truthful, and the most American of all our poets. He has held the highest rank in these respects for more than fifty years. Many of his poems have passed entire into the memories of the people, rivaling in this respect the popularity of "Gray's Elegy" with the people of England. New schools of poetry have been born and died since Bryant's 'Lines to a Waterfowl,' and 'Thanatopsis,' but no novelties have ever approached the sterling qualities which have endeared these and his other poems to the hearts of his countrymen. This edition is worthy of him. The elegance, high finish, and complete appropriateness of the artistic embellishments here presented cannot fail to be appreciated by his numerous admirers."
A CAPITAL NEW JUVENILE TO AID CHILDREN TO LEARN FRENCH.
JANET ET SES AMIS.
(JANETTE AND HER FRIENDS.)
ILLUSTRATED WITH SEVENTY-FOUR ORIGINAL DESIGNS.
One vol., 4to. Illuminated Cloth. Price, $3.
"It is the most perfect juvenile of the season; the pictures are each artistic. We predict great popularity for 'Janet et ses Amis.'"—The Daily Critic.
"A book in French for children, with a simple, limpid, attractive text, and a very delightful series of illustrations. The ease, grace, and purity of the French style are quite remarkable in an American writer; for we scarcely betray a secret in stating that the author is Mrs. Janet R. Chase Hoyt, the younger daughter of the late Chief Justice whose talent in using both pen and pencil has long been privately exercised for the gratification of her friends."—Tribune.

ELECTION EXCITEMENT.

THE PUBLIC STILL ANXIOUS ABOUT THE RESULT.

LARGE CROWDS AROUND THE VARIOUS BULLETIN-BOARDS—THE SITUATION EAGERLY DISCUSSED—CONFIDENCE IN A REPUBLICAN TRIUMPH — PRESIDENT GRANT'S ORDER RECEIVED IN A MOST FAVORABLE MANNER.

Notwithstanding the dampening effect of the rain yesterday, the popular interest in the election showed few signs of decrease. The same surging mobs of eager citizens clustered in front of the various bulletin-boards in Printing-house square, and conned the results displayed thereon with as much avidity as ever. There was less cheering than on Thursday, but the public uncertainty was in nowise abated. Around the TIMES bulletin was a crowd numbering several hundreds, the major portion of them evidently business men, who watched the appearance of each fresh announcement with the utmost patience and good humor. Hayes was evidently their favorite, and as successive dispatches from the disputed States came in the popular satisfaction broke out into cheers. The telegram from Chairman Martin, of the Republican State Committee, announcing that Florida had certainly gone for Hayes by 2,000 majority, was generally considered as "settling" the question in regard to that State. Louisiana and South Carolina were well known to be Republican on a fair vote, so that there was little anxiety felt in regard to them, notwithstanding the claims of the opposition. All day long the streets teemed with newsboys shouting out the most extravagant and incongruous claims on either side, while the afternoon dailies supplied hourly "extras" containing fresh dispatches from the Chairmen of the respective State Committees in Florida, South Carolina, and Louisiana. At one time the Sun windows displayed telegrams from Charleston claiming a Democratic majority for Hampton in South Carolina of 1,200, with a smaller majority for Tilden, while the bulletins of the Mail, further down the street, placed South Carolina in the Republican column, with a majority of from 8,000 to 10,000 on the electoral ticket. Notwithstanding the positive claims of the opposition, however, the idea seemed to have thoroughly penetrated even the Democratic portion of the public that the three disputed States had gone Republican. This conclusion was largely brought about by the conflicting claims of the Tilden bureau in Liberty street and one or two of the Democratic "organs," whose zeal had got the upper hand of their discretion. Among the defeated there was comparatively little bitterness, and a general disposition to abide the result, whatever it might be, was discernible on all hands. Late in the afternoon a new direction was given to the popular interest by the appearance of the President's letter to Gen. Sherman, directing him to instruct the Army officers in the Southern States to afford all needed protection to the legal authorities in counting of the vote, and to expose any attempt at cheating by either party. The order was displayed prominently on the bulletins of THE TIMES and other newspapers, and at once became the topic of eager discussion. By the Republicans of all classes the order was approved as a courageous and praiseworthy endeavor on the part of the President to secure an honest canvass and count at the South, regardless of party interests. Among the better class of Democrats the order was generally pronounced a fair one, and even among the lowest and roughest elements in the crowd, it was difficult to get up any excitement. A group of the latter, in front of the Tribune office, muttered a few oaths, and predicted "trouble" if the order was carried out, but their bluster was short-lived and elicited little attention.

A tall Irishman in front of the Express bulletin, attracted some notice by swearing that "Hayes would be assassinated if he ever passed through Baltimore on his way to the White-House," and a few other threats of a similar nature were uttered by others of the same nationality, but only with the effect of raising a smile on the faces of passers by. In fact there was considerably less excitement than had been manifested the day previous over conflicting election returns. Toward evening calcium lights were mounted in front of THE TIMES and other offices, and the latest returns displayed for the benefit of the throngs of business men on their way homeward. Among this class there was little difference of opinion over the President's order, both parties accepting his assurances of a fair count with confidence.

IN WALL AND BROAD STREETS.

THE EXCITEMENT ON 'CHANGE CONSIDERABLY ABATED—THE REPUBLICANS CONFIDENT OF HAYES' ELECTION.

Although the political situation was a prominent topic in the general discussion among the Wall and Broad street brokers yesterday, it was everywhere apparent that the interest in the subject had greatly subsided. On Thursday one could not pass a single group of men without overhearing a political debate more or less warmly conducted, but yesterday the subject of the Presidential contest gave way in a great degree to the ordinary business of the street. The Republicans, who compose a majority of the various Exchanges, were confident of the election of Hayes, and being so confident, did not stop to argue the question with their Democratic associates. No surer indication of this general reaction from exciting uncertainty to a determination to abandon the political topic was to be found than in the perceptible decrease in the sale of the newspaper "extra." As on the three previous days, the newsboys were to be heard at regular intervals crying their wares, but though they energetically strove to secure the enormous sales of the previous days, they failed to stir the lagging interest to any material extent. Bulletins were posted in front of the Gold Exchange at various intervals during the day, but those who read them with the hope of finding a possible solution of the Presidential enigma did so only to have that hope dispelled and their doubt increased. While on Thursday the conflicting character of these dispatches tended to excite an amusing inclination to wager on the result of the contest, they yesterday were read without any of those manifestations of popular interest which they excited on Wednesday and Thursday. In the Stock Exchange it was also apparent that the brokers were giving more attention to their legitimate vocations than they had done the two preceding days. There were fewer bets made, and those only by partisans of both parties. At the Produce Exchange the same disposition to abandon discussion was manifested. To be sure, there were some debates upon the political situation, but they were neither so heated nor so partisan as on the previous day. The most contradictory rumors were received during the day, but they tended rather to increase the determination to believe nothing but official returns than to reawaken the excitement which they had once created. The desire to settle all wagers by the agreeable and economical system of calling them "square" was even more general than on Thursday.

AT THE FIFTH AVENUE HOTEL.

GREAT INTEREST IN THE RESULT EVINCED—THE SITUATION WARMLY DISCUSSED—GEN. GRANT'S ORDER APPROVED.

Within and about the Fifth Avenue Hotel last evening there was less excitement than during preceding evenings. The interest in the results was none the less intense than formerly, but its manifestations were more subdued as far as conduct and expression were concerned. From quite an early hour there was a large crowd in and about the hotel corridors, as well as on the sidewalk and in the street adjoining. Both crowds grew less in numbers rapidly as the evening wore on, until at about 10:30 P. M. there were very few persons standing on the sidewalks. The crowds had been dispersed and officers stationed at the doors of the hotel refused to permit any excepting guests to enter. The rooms of the State Committee had been abandoned, and, later on, the National Committee gave up its rooms on the Twenty-third street side. The persons present from time to time in the reading-room, wine room, and the corridors of the hotel, gathered in little knots and discussed the situation in low and earnest tones. The Democrats present were not over-confident, but listened eagerly to all tidings and opinions with a lively sense of uncertainty and some dismal forebodings. The Republicans, as a rule, felt and expressed confidence in the results. Early in the evening expectancy was rife as to the reception of some positive and decisive news of victory, but this hope was soon dispelled, since a telegram received indicated that no authentic information need be expected from Louisiana or South Carolina until Monday. Occasionally some person fresh from the reading of partisan bulletins or newspapers would break in the midst of a group and impart some startling and improbable "news," but this did not seem to produce any very marked result. An elderly and handsome-looking gentleman, who described himself as "Jay Gould with a P," on one of such occasions began to inveigh against the lying of the Democratic press. He passed from this topic to speak of Mr. Tilden. He said there were three states—one of them was that of eternal bliss, another that of Hades, and the third that of hell. Hades was the intermediate stage, and was the one in which Mr. Tilden then was. Whether the devil would catch him or not, was now the question. It had been said of Tom Pepper that he was so great a liar that the devil himself refused to have him. So it was with Tilden. The devil would be afraid to take Tilden lest the latter should wreck him as he had wrecked railroads. The speaker said that the real issue was Union or disunion, and for his part he was in favor of the Union most decidedly. The remarks made were listened to with marked favor by a large crowd which had gathered about the speaker. At another time a gentleman from Missouri, named Barrett, had an earnest discussion with an Ohio man, which also provoked quite a general interest. A gentleman who came in later gave an interesting account to some of his friends as to an occurrence on a street car that very evening. It appeared that the gentleman had been riding on the front platform of the car, on which there was a man who was quite blatant as to a Democratic triumph. He said, in a very offensive way, that the Democrats had carried the country, but that the Republicans would cheat them out of it. He offered to bet $10 on the result. The gentleman telling the story immediately offered to bet $10 that the other would not bet the $10, and said he would put the money in the hands of the car-driver. The man who had first offered to bet refused to put up any money, saying that the driver would take both sums and "clear out." He was then made the subject of some energetic remarks by the driver, who was quite incensed at having his honesty impugned. At any rate, the man refused to put up any money, and backed out of the bet entirely.

The general opinion among both Democrats and Republicans at the hotel, in regard to President Grant's views as expressed, was decidedly in favor of their honesty and fairness, and the President came in for a very full share of praise for his conduct.

AT THE EVERETT HOUSE.

GOV. TILDEN IN CONSULTATION WITH THE DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE—DISPATCHES WHICH FAILED TO CREATE ENTHUSIASM.

Tammany Hall was deserted yesterday, none of its adherents apparently finding any incentive in the news received during the day to call for any joyous expression of opinion. A strong force of Police was present at the Everett House to preserve order, and to keep out of the halls and corridors the rough crowds which have for the last few days invaded them and excessively annoyed the guests of the hotel by their noisy and eccentric demonstrations. Those who gained access to the hotel during the day and evening showed no enthusiasm in relation to the dispatches specially prepared for them, as this form of sensation had become wearisome and almost disgusting, Democrats are accustomed to lying statements and dispatches, but the doses had been administered to them so freely that they got nauseated, and persistently refused to cheer mere announcements which were not substantiated. In the afternoon Gov. Tilden called at the Everett House, and remained some time in the committee-rooms, leaving at 4:30 o'clock in company with August Belmont, looking exceedingly care-worn and weary. Ex-Senator James O'Brien called at the rooms at 7:30 o'clock in the evening, and had long conferences with members of the committee. John Morrissey called a few minutes after Mr. O'Brien departed, and remained a good part of the evening, awaiting the reception of dispatches and further developments relative to South Carolina, Louisiana, and Florida.

Among the so-called "dispatches" announced last evening was one from New-Orleans, stating that returns were in from all the Parishes except four, and that Tilden had thus far received 6,451 majority. One from Charleston, S. C., was to the effect that the latest revision of the returns gave Tilden 1,200 majority. Another, from Washington, announced that "Secretary Morrill had told a friend that Tilden was elected, and that the excitment would subside in a few days." One from Atlanta, Ga., signed by James Brooke, Chairman of the "City Committee," gave the information that a company of United States troops had just been ordered to Tallahassee, and that they would leave last evening. A dispatch from Summerville, S. C., that the "Executive Committee claimed the election of Hampton by 1,230 majority; that Tilden was but little behind; that flags were flying, and that cannons had been firing for two hours past," caused a ripple of excitement, but no enthusiasm.

THE PRESIDENT'S ORDER.

HOW IT WAS RECEIVED IN THIS CITY—REPUBLICANS AND FAIR-MINDED DEMOCRATS SAY IT WAS A GOOD AND JUDICIOUS ACT—VIOLENT DEMOCRATIC PARTISANS BELIEVE OTHERWISE.

President Grant's orders to Gen. Sherman in regard to the canvass in the States of Louisiana and Florida afforded a most interesting topic of conversation yesterday to all classes of people. Republicans were generally of the opinion that troops were urgently needed in the two States, in view of the dispatches telling of violence already perpetrated and threatened by the Democrats. All that the Republicans conversed with by the TIMES reporters seemed to care for was that there should be a fair count of the election returns. They were satisfied to gracefully submit to the Presidency of Tilden for four years if it could be proved that he had been fairly elected, as their opponents have claimed. They were not, however, willing that he should be thrust into the White House by the White Leaguers, Kuklux, and Rifle Clubs of the South. His election by means of the intimidation of white and negro voters in Louisiana and the destruction of ballot-boxes and returns, it was believed, would be by no means a fair one. The instructions of the President to Gen. Sherman were therefore regarded as necessary and wise. Fair-minded Democrats were ready to concede that the action of the President would not materially alter the result, and that it was probably called for by the exigencies of the situation, and therefore judicious. This class of Democrats were especially well pleased with the language employed by the President. It was considered to be temperate, fair, and reasonable. There was nothing in the telegrams to show that the President desired anything but a fair counting of the returns and the maintenance of peace and order, and he appeared to rise highly in the estimation of these non-partisans. A gentleman now residing in this City who owns considerable property in Louisiana, who has a thorough knowledge of the State, and who is a warm supporter of Tilden, said that he was glad to hear that troops were to be sent to the State to protect the canvass. He knew Gen. Augur well, and the citizens of Louisiana generally believed him to be a man who would stoop to nothing of a dishonorable character. The count by the Returning Board, under Gen. Augur's protection, would, he believed, be fair. Gen. Roger was also believed to be, by prominent Southern Democrats now in the City, an honorable man in every respect and above the suspicion of lending himself to fraud of any character. All the Southerners with whom the TIMES reporters conversed seemed to have the utmost confidence in Gen. Sherman and his officers and believed that their influence would in no way prevent a fair count of the vote in the disputed States.

Some violent Democratic partisans were loud in their denunciations of the President's telegrams, and professed to regard them as an evidence of intention on the part of the Republican party to defraud Tilden out of his legitimate vote. Some of these people seemed to be determined to raise a row whether Hayes was shown to be elected by the official returns or not. Many of them last evening gathered around the newspaper offices, the Everett House, and at Democratic resorts, and talked of war if Tilden was not elected. A great deal of mischief is being done by indiscreet local Democratic leaders who admit that they believe no trouble would arise out of Hayes' election, but they keep up an unhealthy state of excitement by their wild assertions. The numerous class of lawless people who calculate upon some advantages to themselves in the way of chances for robbery, &c., by breeding a disturbance are abroad in the streets and active, but are kept in check by the vigilance of the Police, who are on hand at the least indication of a fight.

WHAT THURLOW WEED SAYS.

In answer to the inquiries of a TIMES reporter last evening, Mr. Thurlow Weed said that he had just left Gov. Morgan, and, with the two letters of President Grant before them, had fully discussed the advisability of the action taken by the President. They considered that it was an eminently proper one—one which as President Gen. Grant was called upon to make. The letters were concise, but they fully covered all requirements. They were not partisan, but throughout gave evidence of a solicitude for the purity of the elective franchise, especially in the request that representative members of both parties should attend and see that this was strictly cared for. Mr. Weed said that when he first heard of the orders he thought that perhaps they were unwise, but upon reading and carefully considering them he was convinced that under the circumstances there could be no just cause of complaint from any source, but, on the contrary, a general expression of commendation of the spirit shown.

MR. LEVI P. MORTON'S VIEWS.

Mr. Levi P. Morton said: There certainly can be no desire on the part of any good citizen of either party that the candidate he has supported should be placed in the Presidential chair unless he has been elected by an honest vote. The Republican Party submitted gracefully and promptly when, on the morning after the election, it was supposed that Mr. Tilden had been elected, and they can now only desire a fair count and honest returns. It is desirable that citizens from other States, irrespective of party, should accept the invitation of the Governor of Louisiana, and see that a fair count is made of the vote actually cast.

WHAT JACKSON S. SCHULTZ SAYS.

Mr. Jackson S. Schultz said that he had just returned to the City, and had only then read the order. He would himself, he said, have done the same thing or even more for the purpose of keeping order. If President Grant had sufficient information from the States in question to warrant him in believing there was a likelihood of trouble, his action was perfectly justifiable.

LEADING DEMOCRATS ON THE SITUATION.

A TIMES reporter had an interview last evening with Mr. Abram S. Hewitt, at the Everett House. Mr. Hewitt was seated in one of the front parlors of the building in which Gov. Tilden received dispatches during the past few days. When asked what he thought of Gen. Grant's order, Mr. Hewitt replied that he knew of nothing in the Constitution of the United States that would warrant the President in sending down troops to Florida and Louisiana, or to any other State, for the purpose of interfering with an election. No authority could be adduced for such action. It had not been alleged that there was any insurrection in the States, and unless there was an insurrection, and the President was called upon to suppress it, the order to send troops was unjustifiable. So far as the President desired to have an honest count of the votes cast he agreed with him, but that could be done without the aid of troops, because there did not seem to be any manifestation of a disturbance. It could not be reasonably said that the troops were ordered to Florida and Louisiana, because the vote was close. It was also close in Ohio and in other States, and it would therefore be as proper to send troops to Ohio as to Florida. What he wanted to secure was a fair count of the votes, and to prevent frauds, and that could be effectually accomplished by impartial citizens from various States without the aid of the United States troops.

Mayor Wickham who was seated next Mr. Hewitt, said that he coincided in the remarks of Mr. Hewitt, and added that he thought it strange that the troops should be sent from South Carolina, where the Governor of that State required their presence, to Florida where the election was over.

Mr. William C. Whitny, the Corporation Counsel, subsequently gave his views on the subject. He said he regretted that in the present state of the public mind the troops should be ordered into a State without any apparent threat of a breach of the peace, and not in pursuance of the Constitution applicable to the subject. It was, in his opinion, not likely to allay public excitement, but, on the contrary, was calculated to increase it. He did not think that the situation was improved by the act of the President.

Mr. Thomas Cooper Campbell said that, while he could not see an honest purpose in the order of the President, still it could not be regarded as proof of fraud. What was required was a correct count of the votes, and that could be accomplished with the aid of honest men of both parties, such as Senator Christiancy, Gen. Barlow, and William M. Evarts, in behalf of the Republicans, and Senator Bayard, Gov. Ingersoll, and Joel Parker, on the part of the Democrats.

Like views were expressed by a number of other leading Democrats.

THE EXCITEMENT ON LONG ISLAND.

The excitement of the cities growing out of the uncertainty as to the result of the election, and the conflicting character of the returns, has extended to every village on Long Island, and especially those along the lines of railroad having telegraphic communication. The rush for the morning papers has been great, and passengers from the City have been eagerly questioned as to the latest news, as they landed at the various stations. Up to yesterday, the party headquarters in the large villages were still kept open, and they probably will be until the result shall have been definitely settled, as they have been thronged every night with anxious inquirers after news. The colored people, of whom there are a large number on the Island, have throughout exhibited the greatest anxiety, most of them appearing to view the result of a Democratic success with the utmost dread.

LOST A FINGER.

The Waco (Texas) Examiner says: "Mr. Brook Smith, now living in Crownwood, was the victim of a singular accident last Monday morning. He was walking along the principal street of the town, when suddenly feeling a stinging sensation in his right hand, he raised it from his side and found the forefinger gone. He of course was surprised and horrified; his hand was bleeding badly; the dismembered finger lay on the ground at some distance from him; he had not heard the report of a gun, and naturally was very much at a loss to account for the mishap. Several persons went to his assistance, among whom was a physician, who stopped the flow of blood and dressed the wound. Parties went about in search of a cause for the singular occurrence, and after a time ascertained that a man who was examining a Winchester rifle in a gun store several hundred yards from where Mr. Smith was walking accidentally discharged the weapon, and the ball, after passing through a plank wall, sped on and did the mischief."

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

John Walter, Esq., M. P., (of the London Times,) and Mr. Walter were entertained at dinner, last evening, by Mr. L. P. Morton.

The Bible-class which has been conducted by Prof. William H. Thomson, M. D., now for five years at Association Hall, will be resumed to-morrow, 12th inst., at 5 o'clock.

Maurice Levi and Betsey Levi assigned their property, for the benefit of creditors, to Adolph Gershel, yesterday. Morris Kohn made a similar assignment to James McNab and Edward Williams.

A camel's hair shawl, valued at $700, was stolen on Wednesday last from the carriage of Mrs. Christiana Herter, of No. 436 West Twenty-second street, while it was standing at the corner of Twentieth street and Sixth avenue.

The first lecture in connection with the Science and Art Association, will be delivered on Monday evening next by Prof. R. Ogden Doremus, who will treat of "Water and Croton Water." The course of lectures, as heretofore, will be given in Dr. Rogers' church, corner of Fifth avenue and Twenty-first street.

James Mulhearn, the youth who, on the evening of Aug. 15 last, stabbed and killed his step-father, opposite No. 281 Elizabeth street, while the latter was in the act of assaulting him with a slung-shot, was run over by a Hudson River Railroad freight train on Thursday afternoon, and so seriously injured that he died soon after at Bellevue Hospital.

The body of an unknown man, about fifty years old and five feet nine inches high, was yesterday found floating in the Wallabout Canal at the foot of Hewes street.

Elias W. Curtis yesterday recovered a judgment by default in the Circuit Court, Kings County, before Justice Barnard, for $1,135 10 against the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company for the loss of baggage.

The warrants for the payment of $1,250 each to Messrs. Mumford and Ditmars, the architects of the new Municipal building, have been signed by City Auditor Searing. This is one-half the amount appropriated by the Common Council, to be allowed as a prize for the best plan for the building and to pay the salary of the Superintendent of Construction.

Gen. Roger A. Pryor yesterday made application to Judge Pratt, in the Supreme Court, Kings County, for the appointment for John A. Gilbert, a banker in New-York, as Receiver of the Loaners' Bank of New-York, in place of John F. Hubbard, resigned. Jesse Johnson opposed the motion, in his own interest and as a depositor, arguing that the appointment of some disinterested person would be much better for the interests of all concerned. Justice Pratt reserved his decision.

Several of the persons arrested on charges of voting and registering illegally were yesterday arraigned before United States Commissioner Winslow for trial. David McShane, who was charged with refusing to give information in regard to registration to a United States Deputy Marshal, disclaimed any intention of violating the law, and was discharged. David Powers, charged with voting illegally, was also discharged. Samuel Kerger, charged with attempting to vote illegally, and Thomas Delany and Dr. Wesley Ferzler were held for trial.

Martin Graham, who said he was a speculator, of No. 144 Cherry street, New-York, was arrested at Hamilton Ferry last night by Officer Boylan, of the Third Precinct, on suspicion, and taken to the station-house. He had in his possession a ship's chronometer and a spy-glass, valued at $250, which were identified by a seaman as having just been stolen from the cabin of the bark Atlas, lying at the Atlantic Dock. The seaman took the property, and Graham was locked up.

The motion argued a few days ago before Judge Gilbert, in the Supreme Court, in the case of Francis B. O'Connor against the United States Life Insurance Company, to vacate the order obtained by the plaintiff for the separate examination of the defendants before trial, in order to ascertain who should be made the defendants in the suit to prevent the officers of the company from transferring it to the control of another company, was yesterday denied by the Court, with $10 costs to the plaintiff.

NEW-JERSEY.

Wm. H. Weed, while walking on the Pennsylvania Railroad track at Linden, yesterday, was struck by a train and killed.

Frank Hines fell from a Hoboken car, corner of Washington street, Hoboken, Thursday night, and was injured seriously if not fatally.

The New-Jersey Supreme Court has decided the contest between John B. Haight and James S. Love, for the City Collector of Jersey City, in favor of Mr. Love.

While studying the returns on the bulletin boards in New-York City on Wednesday night, ex-Mayor Manners, of Jersey City Heights, had a valuable hunting-case watch stolen.

Christian Meeiss was proceeding homeward through Union Hill Thursday night when a shot was fired at him. The ball narrowly missed Meeiss' head. The man who fired the shot is not known.

Dock rats have recently stolen property of large value from the Erie Railway docks in Jersey City. William Calhoun was yesterday found in possession of a bag of brass findings and arrested.

A table prepared in the office of the Tax Commissioners of the City of Paterson, shows that in that city there are 57,383 lots and 6,454 houses; that the value of the real estate is $18,926,245, and of the personal estate $4,403,701.

Some time ago the Jersey City Board of Aldermen passed an ordinance prohibiting the driving of cattle through the streets. The matter was taken into Court, and yesterday the Supreme Court decided that the ordinance is ineffective because it does not sufficiently define the offense it is intended to punish.

THE EAST RIVER BRIDGE.

The second and last of the foot-bridge cables of the East River Bridge was on Wednesday last brought over to the company's yard, adjoining Fulton Ferry, on the Brooklyn side, where it still remains, awaiting the completion of the arrangements for placing it in position over the tops of the towers, which, it is expected, will be to-day. The cable is 2⅝ inches in diameter, 3,750 feet long, and weighs about forty-six thousand pounds. This is the companion to the rope placed in position last week, and the eighth cable, which has been laid across the river. Beside this one, there are but two more to be laid, and they are to be only 2¼ inches in diameter. When these are all placed in position the foot-bridge will be laid, and it is now thought that all these things will be accomplished in about five weeks from the present time. The heavy derricks which are to be used in the construction of the abutments and approaches to the bridge were yesterday brought from the bridge-yard at Red Hook and landed at the bridge dock, and the slats which are to form the foot-bridge are now being carried to the river side, whence they will be immediately carried to the top of the towers. After the foot-bridge cables are all laid, and the foot-bridge placed in position, it is expected that the progress of the work will be much more rapid than it has been for the past few months.

STOLEN PICTURES.

During the fire which occurred on Tuesday night last at the organ factory of Peloubet, Pelton & Co., at Nos. 841 and 843 Broadway, the art gallery of H. D. Miner, on the second floor of No. 845 Broadway, was threatened with destruction. A number of valuable pictures were hung on the walls of the gallery preparatory to an auction sale which was to take place on the following night. When the fire broke out the pictures were removed from their fastenings and carried across the street to a store opposite, the Police, fire insurance patrol, and a number of citizens assisting in the removal of the works of art. After the fire, when the pictures were returned to the gallery, five of the paintings were missing, and no trace of them has since been found. It is evident that during the confusion and excitement caused by the fire, the pictures were carried off by thieves.

ARRIVAL OF INDIAN CHIEFS.

Col. George Anderson, the well-known Indian Agent and scout, arrived in the City yesterday morning in company with a delegation of Indians, representing the Sioux, Apache, and Pawnee tribes, who are en route to Washington. The party embraces "Ton Ton Que," Comanche Chief; "Buffalo Hump" and "Fire Water Jim," Pawnee Chiefs; "Coppololis," Apache Chief, and a dozen others.

A SWITCH-TENDER KILLED BY THE CARS.

Peter Smith, aged fifty-five years, for thirteen years a track and switch tender on the Pennsylvania Railroad at Elizabeth, N. J., was killed Thursday night while fixing a bolt in a rail. His foot got fast between two converging rails, and before he could extricate himself he was struck by the locomotive. He leaves a wife and five children.

THE SHOOTING OF CHARLES BURNAM.

ANTE-MORTEM STATEMENT OF THE VICTIM—HIS ASSAILANT STILL AT LARGE.

Charles G. Burnam, now in a dying condition at Bellevue Hospital, from the effects of two pistol-shot wounds, inflicted by an unknown rough at the disreputable resort, known as Tivoli Hall, No. 263 West Seventeenth street, on Wednesday morning, made the subjoined ante-mortem statement before Coroner Croker, late on Thursday night:

My name is Charles Burnam; I live at No. 263 West Seventeenth street; I do not believe that I am going to die, and I hope to recover from the effects of the injury I received; I attend bar for William Burns, of No. 263 West Seventeenth street; last night, (Wednesday,) we had a ball back of the saloon on Sixteenth street and Eighth avenue; after we shut up I went to the saloon of Bolan to get a stew; Mr. Bolan and my "boss" were indulging in a bottle of wine; my friend, George Cavanagh, and I joined in, and we had four or five bottles of wine; we remained there until about 4 o'clock in the morning, and then all went away except myself and the man who kept the saloon; I went out on the sidewalk, and there met a woman who had walked down from Thirty-ninth street; she asked me for five cents; I took her down to our store, where she wished to remain till daylight; I took my clothes off and prepared to go to bed; a rap came to the door, and I opened it, and McGuire and another man came in; then there were three men and the woman in the room; after a time I missed a pin out of my shirt, and the woman told me that McGuire had taken it; I accused McGuire, and he denied the charge and abused me; he also got drinks, and would not pay for them; I wanted McGuire to go out, but he would not do so, and called me a liar, &c., for accusing him of stealing the pin; I ordered him out, and he struck at me, at which I went behind the bar, got a club, and struck McGuire and the other fellow; his companion ran out, while McGuire washed the blood off, and then threatened to kill me; he then started to go away; the woman was at this time standing at the glass, and I was lying on the bed; while I was in that position a young man came in and began shooting at me; he fired three shots at me, the first of which missed, but the other two went into me; I did not know the man's name, but it was the man who was with McGuire, and the same man I hit with the club; I jumped up, and after walking three or four steps, fell to the floor; I am twenty-eight years of age, and was born at Utica, N. Y.; I never saw the man before I saw him with McGuire that morning, Nov. 9, 1876, between 5 and 6 o'clock.

CHARLES BURNAM, his X mark.

At a late hour yesterday Burnam's condition had not materially changed. The Police have been thus far unsuccessful in their search for the man who fired the shots.

THE KILLING OF JOHN BALDWIN.

The case of John Baldwin, of No. 322 Pearl street, who died on Tuesday morning from the effects of a fracture received under circumstances which justified the arrest of his son, John Baldwin, Jr., was investigated yesterday afternoon by Coroner Ellinger, at the Fourth Precinct. Detective Musgrave, who arrested young Baldwin, testified that the prisoner stated that his father had fallen against the wheel of an express wagon while in the act of assaulting him with a knife. Other witnesses corroborated the statement of the prisoner, but William H. Freude, of No. 21 Stanhope street, Brooklyn, gave testimony to the effect that while old Baldwin was running after his son, the latter picked up what appeared to the witness to be a large stick, with which he struck his father on the head. As old Baldwin fell against the wagon, the son observed, "I had to do it, else you would have cut me dead." The father brandished a knife while running after the son. The jury, after a protracted deliberation, returned the following open verdict:

"We find that John Baldwin came to his death by a fracture of the skull, on Nov. 6, 1876, at the corner of Pearl street and Peck slip, but whether the fracture was caused by a fall or a blow the jury are unable to determine."

The prisoner was released on furnishing $1,500 bail to insure his appearance before the Grand Jury when required.

DEATH FROM EXHAUSTION.

The body of Miss Sophia Valentine, the daughter of David Valentine, of Peekskill, Westchester county, who disappeared a few nights since, has been discovered at Stillwater Swamp by a man named Harrison Kirkham, who was out shooting. The girl had been sent to a neighbor's to procure some milk, and not returning soon, her mother and sister started in search of her. She meanwhile returned by a different road and finding her mother and sister absent, went out to meet them. Darkness coming on quickly, she lost her way, and becoming bewildered and benumbed with the cold, she wandered on and on until she finally, became exhausted and lay down and died.

THE NEW-YORK AQUARIUM.

The New-York Aquarium has become one of the most popular places of resort for pleasure-seekers in this City. There has just been added a very fine specimen of a brilliantly-colored triple-tailed little fish peculiar to the Japanese waters. This singularly-formed and beautifully-tinted fish, it is said, is the product of special cultivation. Whether this is true or not, the most learned pisciculturists have not yet decided, but there can be no question about the beauty of the fish, the first of its kind ever seen alive out of its native element.

MR. LINCOLN'S PREDICTION.

Gen. Butler was congratulated upon his election to Congress by his friends in Lowell, Mass., on Thursday evening, and in acknowledging the compliment said: "It is a singular fact to-day that, leaving out North Carolina, the question remains to be determined by Louisiana, Florida, and South Carolina. If they have voted for the Republican ticket, the Republican Party is again in power, the country is in the hands of friends and is rescued from its enemies; and is it not a singular fact that this country stands waiting to hear from the vote of the freedmen of the South, and that on their votes depends whether or not this country is to be delivered over to foes who would have broken it up if it had not been for the bravery of our boys in blue, fighting in the trenches against the very men who now seek to rule it? We are depending now upon the negro vote precisely as we depended in the war upon the negro soldier. There appears now something prophetic in the words of Abraham Lincoln: 'The time may come when the colored freedman by his ballot shall restore the jewel of liberty to the diadem of the Republic.' One would think the sainted martyr prophesied this day and this hour. Let us hope for the best."

THE YALE CATALOGUE.

The annual catalogue of Yale College has just been issued. There has been a slight falling off in the number of students, but not as large as was anticipated at the beginning of the term—due, in all probability, to the effect of the hard times. All the other Eastern colleges, with the exception of Princeton, have suffered in a similar manner. The number of graduate students is slightly increased. The following is the summary: Theological students, 95; law students, 60; medical students, 36; graduate students, 67; special students, 2; undergraduate academical students, 569; Sheffield scientific students, 206; art students, 16; total in the university, 1,021, against 1,051 last year. It is perhaps worthy of notice that ten students are pursuing a post-graduate course in the law school for the new degree of M. L. This special course of study was inaugurated this year. For the first time, the names of young lady students in the art school have been printed in a Yale College catalogue. For quite a number of years back the privileges of instruction in this department have been thrown open to young ladies. A course of public lectures will be delivered at the art school during the second term, on the "Æsthetic of Every-day Life," by Mr. Donald G. Mitchell. Lectures will also be given during the first term by Parke Godwin, John La Farge, E. E. Salisbury, and Charles Eliot Norton.

THE WASHINGTON FAMILY'S FLAGS.

A Boston paper says: "All who have been in the rotunda of the Boston State-house have noticed, opposite the main entrance, the batte-flags of the Massachusetts regiments, also some gray stones set in the pavement below them. These stones are a fac-simile of the tombstones of the Washington family in England. These facts are set forth on a small marble tablet, conspicuously placed. So much in explanation. A few weeks ago, while a person was looking at them, a party of two or three ladies and an impulsive young miss, came in and stopped in front of the colors. The young miss was first to speak: 'O, my! what are these?' 'Why, Mary, what makes you so green?' exclaimed one of the others. 'Not know what these are! Indeed, I am astonished. These are the memorials of the Washington family. Didn't they have lots of flags?'"

A SINGULAR LAW SUIT.

A letter from Des Moines, Iowa, says: "It is the opinion of some people that a railroad corporation is a golden goose to be plucked ad libitum. George and John G. Bosch were dwellers in Burlington. They owned a lot fronting the Mississipi River, on which they erected a building and brewed beer. The Burlington and Missouri Railroad Company came along and built a railroad in front of their brewery and made land out into the river and laid tracks on the same, and erected depots and warehouses. In 1871 a fire came along from a neighboring street and enveloped the brewery of the Bosches. Then came the firemen with their fire-quenchers, and by reason of the railroad track, depots, warehouse, &c., they could not reach the river for water supply as successfully as they did before the railroad came, and the brewery burned up. Whereupon the Bosches demanded of the railroad company $22,000 damages, as compensation for said obstruction. The Supreme Court sat in judgment on the matter the other day, and decided that the tracks, depots, &c., of the railroad company had no connection with the fire apparatus of the city, hence their influence in the destruction of the brewery was too small to hang even the baseless fabric of a dream of damages thereon—in fact there was no bottom to their law suit at all."

THE HARVARD EIGHT.

PREPARATIONS FOR NEXT YEAR'S CONTEST WITH YALE.

From the Boston Herald, Nov. 10.

At present sixteen men are working steadily on the river for positions in the Harvard University crew, taking every advantage offered for boat practice while yet the river remains open and the warm weather permits them to exercise in open air. Every day the members may be seen, in single scull or pair oar, training faithfully, with a determination to acquire that strength and clock-work skill in movement without which no crew can hope to succeed. Every man is closely watched throughout, carefully coached into good form and practice, and all defects in movement strictly pointed out and guarded against. The men, as a whole, are solid, muscular looking, and healthy, and under the skillful supervision of Mr. Bancroft, Captain of the crew, are rapidly being brought together in practice, and in such a way as to bring out each man's best points to the most advantage, and betray what differences there may be between the candidates. The men now in practice are as follows: Legate, '77; Lemoyne, '77; Loring, '78; Lemoyne, '78; Harding, '78; Littauer, '78; Raymer, '78; Ressler, '78; Jacobs, '79; Brigham, '79; Schwartz, '79; Crocker, '79; Smith, '79; Preston, '79; Conlin, '79; Brewster, '79. All are more or less familiar with the work they are expected to perform. Messrs. Brigham, Schwartz, Smith, and Crocker having been in the freshman crew which rowed last June at Saratoga. Mr. Crocker being Captain thereof. Of the others, Mr. Bancroft, the Captain, was stroke of the University eight last last June, Messrs. Lemoyne, '78, and Jacobs, '79, also occupying positions in the same boat. Messrs. Bancroft and Lemoyne also rowed in the Freshman Crew of '75. The other men, while not so well known in boating matters, save in connection with the Harvard Club Crews, are yet a strong and hearty set of oarsmen, and will work as hard as any one in the cause, which is all that can reasonably be expected. One or two of heavy weight and bad form will have to train down considerably before they can hope for favor in the eyes of the Captain and coach, but good training and a suitable diet will soon work wonders in removing these defects. The efforts of the energetic Captain deserve the heartiest support and co-operation of the students, and are fully recognized. He has taken unusual pains to fit himself for the position, for, not content with the knowledge derived from two years' experience at Saratoga, and from the hard lesson at Springfield, he visited Philadelphia this Summer at the time of the regatta and made a careful study of the American and foreign crews, the rig of their boats, their stroke, their boating system, &c. At present the result of his energy may be seen in the shape of two full eights on the river, which spin down the stream in excellent form, and from which the eight men who will represent the college in the next race with Yale will be selected. This year the captain will keep the entire control of the crew, but will be assisted in the coaching by two or three gentlemen whose names are a guarantee of their ability. This is a change from the plan pursued last year, when all the authority was placed in the hands of the coach, a practice thought to be common in England, but which differs there in the fact that the Captain's duties are in no way encroached upon by the coach, whose position is subordinate.

The costume to be worn will be the conventional Harvard rowing costume, under crimson colors, the dress consisting of light knee breeches, stockings and slippers, bare backs, and crimson handkerchiefs round the head. The course will be over the same stretch as before, the time of the race probably being the 30th of next June. The candidates will continue practising upon the river as long as navigation remains open, and will work through the Winter in the gymnasium and at the boat-house rowing machines.
